'JAFSIE' DECLARES HE KNOWS KIDNAPER AND ARREST IS SURE; EDGAR HOOVER TO LEAD HUNT

PERU'S DEMAND CAUSES BREACH WITH MEXICANS

Foreign Minister Tellez Orders Envoy Back From Lima.

CABRAL IS ACCUSED OF AIDING FUGITIVE

Improper Use of Diplomatic Pouch in Aid of Regime's Foes Charged.

Mexico City, May 14 (A.P.).—Foreign Minister Manuel C. Tellez announced tonight that diplomatic relations between Mexico and Peru had been severed.

The Peruvian government, the foreign minister revealed, recently asked Mexico to withdraw Minister Juan B. Cabral and his staff from Lima, saying they no longer were acceptable as diplomatic representatives.

Peru's action, Senor Tellez said, was based on alleged charges made by Victor Raul Haya de la Torre, a Peruvian, that while in Mexico he had used Mexican diplomatic pouches to transfer private correspondence to Peru.

Abuse of Privilege Denied.

Orders were sent to the diplomatic mission in Lima today to withdraw from the country and passports were handed to Oscar Barrenechea y Raygadas, the Peruvian Minister here, and to members of his staff.

Foreign Minister Tellez declared Mexican diplomatic pouches had not been used improperly and asserted that the Mexican Minister at Lima had not been friendly with Haya, as charged by the Peruvian government.

"We wish to make plain that our relations with the Peruvian people always will remain cordial," the foreign minister said.

But the maintenance of friendly relations with the Sanchez Cerro government in Peru, Senor Tellez added, no longer was possible because of the attitude of that government toward what he termed a misunderstanding.

While relations remain ruptured the Spanish government will assume charge of Mexican affairs in Peru.

Haya Called Fugitive.

Lima, May 14 (A.P.).—Dr. Alberto Freundt Rossell, minister of foreign affairs, announced tonight that his government had requested the Mexican government to recall the Mexican minister because he had visited Victor Raul Haya de la Torre, leader of the Aprista opposition, when Haya was being sought by the government authorities.

The visit occurred, the foreign minister said, when the opposition leader was staying at the home of the Plenge family, where he had "taken refuge and was escaping from justice."

Gen. Juan B. Cabral, the Mexican minister, denied he had seen the op-

Police State Cook Shot Road-Builder

Woman Was Accused of Stealing His Whisky, Is Report.

A Virginia State road subcontractor was shot and seriously wounded late yesterday afternoon by the cook in the home where he was boarding. Police said the shooting followed Gordon F. Maynard's accusation that Eleanora Whitney, 43 years old, colored, had stolen whisky from him.

The shooting took place in the home of J. Will Anderson, of Accotink. Maynard was removed to the Alexandria General Hospital, where an emergency operation to recover a .25-caliber pistol slug from his body was performed last night. Hospital physicians pronounced his condition as "favorable." The woman was charged with assault with intent to kill.

The woman asserted she shot Maynard, who is 33 years old and lives at 3911 Hanover street, Richmond, after he had accused her of stealing and then slapped her. She said she went to the bedroom of Mrs. Anderson, got the pistol, which was hidden under the mattress, and returned to fire twice at Maynard.

Second Georgia Group Selects 16 for Hoover

Macon, Ga., May 14 (A.P.).—In a harmonious session a faction of Georgia Republicans met here today, selected 16 delegates to support President Hoover and announced they would carry to the national convention in Chicago their fight for recognition over a slate of delegates chosen at another Republican convention in Atlanta last month.

The convention indorsed Mamie Williams, of Savannah, Negro national committeewoman, and H. H. Nichols, of Albany, as national committeeman.

Capper Holds Gas Company Being Milked

Out-of-town interests behind the Washington Gas Light Co. last night were charged with "dizzy financing" by Senator Arthur Capper (Republican), Kansas, chairman of the Senate District committee.

Tracing the history of the local gas concern from its acquisition in 1929 by the Seaboard Investment Trust, to the resignation last week of President George A. G. Wood, Senator Capper said:

"This shows what happens to a local utility in the hands of shrewd financial manipulators. This combination has attempted to milk the local property for all the profit possible."

In the same address Senator Capper "served public notice" he will not abandon his fight to defeat any street car merger bill that does not provide universal free transfers and Public Utility Commission regulation of all electric current.

Discussing the Public Utility Commission's efforts "to break the grip of a powerful utility holding combination on the local gas companies," Senator Capper told how President Albert E. Peirce of the Central Public Service Corporation first began buying controlling interest in the local gas company and later forming the Seaboard Investment Trust of Massachusetts, to hold the stock.

"The Seaboard Investment Trust has now been succeeded by a new

WALSH PLEA SPEEDS ROOSEVELT BACKERS

Montanan Warning Against Deadlock Spurs Drive for Convention Votes.

By EDWARD T. FOLLIARD.

Senator Thomas J. Walsh, of Montana, took the offensive against the "stop-Roosevelt" strategists yesterday, charging that they were out to deadlock the Democratic national convention and select a presidential nominee in the Harry Daugherty manner—in a "smoke-filled room in a downtown hotel some time after 2 a. m."

To frustrate such strategy, Senator Walsh called on the Democrats of Montana—and, inferentially, on the Democrats of other States—to send to Chicago delegates instructed for Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt of New York.

Senator Walsh, "prosecutor" in the celebrated Teapot Dome scandal and permanent chairman of the disastrous Madison Square Garden convention of 1924, is being mentioned for the vice presidential nomination on a Roosevelt ticket. Like Roosevelt's rival, Alfred E. Smith, the Montana senator is a Catholic. In 1924 he turned down the vice presidential nomination. There is a feeling now that his age—73—disqualifies him for the honor.

Walsh's warning against a dead-

Yesterday Featured By Pleasant Weather

The mercury took a nose dive yesterday afternoon from a pleasant temperature of 76 degrees to a still more pleasant one of 69. A game of bo-peep between sun and clouds was said to be the cause of the dizzy tail spin on the part of the thermometer.

Fair and somewhat warmer weather is predicted for today. Yesterday's balmy breezes and fair skies attracted large crowds to the ball park and the races. The Zoo, Rock Creek Park, Glen Echo and other popular outdoor places were crowded.

FALLS CHURCH BANK ROBBERS BELIEVED HELD

Fort Humphreys Soldier and Capital Pair in Arlington Jail.

CONFESS TO HOLDUP, DETECTIVES ASSERT

Police Recover $684 of Loot; Four Other Thefts, Netting $2,500 Also Charged.

The trio of bandits who held up the East Falls Church branch of the Falls Church Bank on Thursday and assaulted the cashier who tried to prevent the theft of $1,700 were arrested yesterday and admit the holdup, according to police.

Also, the police say, the men have confessed to four holdups in Virginia in the last year which netted them an additional $2,500, which they dissipated in galmbling and liquor. By a strange coincidence the movements of the men were being checked at the very time that the East Falls Church branch was being robbed.

Those under arrest are Sergt. John A. Velke, 30 years old, attached to the Medical Corps at Fort Humphreys, Va.; William B. Babcock, 25 years old, of 718 Eighteenth street northwest, and George T. Belew, 25 years old, of 2213 Rhode Island avenue northeast. All were placed in the custody of Arlington County Sheriff Howard B. Fields.

Alleged Confession Details.

The story told to Detective Sergts. Howard Ogle, John Wise, James Kenney and Carlton Talley, is as follows:

On Thursday the three men, all of whom are married and each of whom is the father of a child, went to the vicinity of the bank.

Belew remained on the outside as a lookout. Velke and Babcock entered the bank. Velke walked to the cashier's window and, after asking for change for a $10 bill, thrust a gun under the nose of A. H. Barbor, 68-year-old cashier of the bank.

Then Babcock hurried behind the cashier's grill. Barbor struggled with him, he said, but he denied Barbor's story that he had struck him with a gun. He scooped the money into a pillow case and the three sped away in an automobile.

Changed Tags on Auto.

Between Falls Church and Annandale, the car left the road, when they tried to negotiate a curve. There they stopped and changed the license plates of the car, substituting District tags, and burying the Virginia tags, which they admitted they had stolen from an Alexandria motor dealer.

Then Babcock went into the woods and buried the money and the guns.

Robbers Loot County Courthouse of Records

Purvis, Miss., May 14 (U.P.).—Robbers broke into the Lamar County Courthouse today and made off with a truck load of county records. A posse was recruited to pursue the thieves and bloodhounds were put on their trail tonight.

The robbery was believed due to political turmoil. Quo warranto proceedings to oust T. F. Thugman, president of the board of supervisors, were filed Friday. The suit charged nonpayment of municipal taxes and failure to pay certain privilege as contractor. Books on cancelled warrants, bank statements and warrant books were included in the loot.

House Will Go on Record In Beer-for-Revenue Issue

145 Sign Petition to Call Up O'Connor-Hull Bill and Vote Will Be Taken Monday, May 23; Democrats Lead Move.

(Associated Press.)

The House will go on record Monday, May 23, on the beer-for-revenue issue.

The vote was assured yesterday when Representative Bachmann, of West Virginia, the Republican whip, stepped to the clerk's desk as the 145th signer of a petition to call up the O'Connor-Hull bill for a tax of 3 cents a pint on beer of not over 2.75 per cent alcohol by weight.

The bill would declare this percentage to be "nonintoxicating in fact."

A burst of applause from antiprohibitionists greeted Mr. Bachmann. Only a few minutes earlier, Representative Kvale (Farmer-Labor), Minnesota, who represents the district once held by Andrew J. Volstead, author of the prohibition enforcement act, had signed.

It will be the second vote on a legalized beer tax this session, but the first on which the ballots of individual members will be recorded. Representative Cullen, leader of the Tammany delegation, was defeated in an attempt to attach this plan to the tax bill by a 216-to-132 vote.

The petition had been lying on the clerk's desk for over a month.

Sponsors attributed a large measure of their success in obtaining the 145 signatures to the recent Ohio primary. Had the required signatures not been obtained yesterday, a vote would not have been possible under House rules before the national conventions in June.

A few minutes before Representative Bachmann signed, Mr. Cullen walked up to Speaker Garner and in a voice that could be heard in the gallery said:

"Sign that; McAdoo turned wet."

Speaker Garner's name was not on the petition. William G. McAdoo,

BURGOO KING WINS BY HEAD IN PREAKNESS

40,000 See Thrilling Duel With Tick On and Boatswain.

JAMES USES WHIP IN STIRRING FINISH

Long Shot Sets Pace From Start, but Bows to Rush of Two Favorites.

By SHIRLEY L. POVICH (Sports Editor of The Post).

Pimlico Race Track, Md., May 14.—In the same breath with Sir Barton and Gallant Fox you now may mention Burgoo King, for on the lathered flanks and the braided mane of this Bradley colt the laurels of the Preakness are draped becomingly over the honors of the Kentucky Derby that he won last week.

As brilliant as the sheen of his chestnut coat was Burgoo King's triumph in the Preakness this afternoon, as he answered the prodding of Jockey Eugene James' knees and the lashing of the whip in the hands of the little bundle of humanity on his back, to come from behind like a true blue-blood of the turf and whip the favorite, Tick On, in a sinew-straining finish by a head margin, with the longshot, Boatswain, a nose farther back in third place.

40,000 See Classic.

It was a finish that stirred the pulses and quickened the tempo of the collective heart-beat of the 40,000 racegoers who jammed Pimlico's famous course to see this winner of the Derby make up ground lost at the outset, follow the pace for the best part of a mile, and then take command like the champion he is, equaling the feats of the only other two thoroughbreads who ever solved the winning combination of a Derby and a Preakness.

Col. E. R. Bradley's running piece of horse flesh matched the early foot of the surprising Bostswain and the favored Tick On to stay with the pace after a sluggish start and the contest soon resolved itself into a three-horse race between these contenders, and Burgoo King was best.

He took the bit in his teeth from the moment the leader rounded the clubhouse turn, and, with the fire of his daddy, Bubbling Over, a former Derby winner, gleaming in his eye, he seemed to sense the indignity that was piled upon a Derby winner by making him second choice in the betting. The last turn into the stretch was the signal for Burgoo King to run, and run he did, overhauling the flying Boatswain a sixteenth out from the finish and answering the whip with a sustained drive that staved off the persistent Tick On.

Pimlico's 40,000, blotting out every

Postmasters Told To Support Hoover

Glover, Addressing Missouri Convention, Says That Is Part of Job.

Springfield, Mo., May 14 (A.P.).—Urging Missouri postmasters to defend and support Herbert Hoover, W. Irving Glover, Second Assistant Postmaster General, told the postmasters' State convention here today: "As long as you do that, you are filling the job of postmaster."

"You are a part of this administration," he said. "It is best for us to get out on the firing line. I shall be back in Washington Monday, and I will be glad to take the resignations of any of you postmasters who do not want to do it."

Answering those who say that America needs a leader, Glover declared: "We've got a leader. We have had one for years. If we do not stand back of that man Hoover, regardless of party, God help this country."

3 G. U. Canoeists Marooned In Flooded Valley Rescued

As the spring-swollen Potomac River receded from its flood crest yesterday afternoon, fire rescue squadmen turned coast guardsmen and rescued three Georgetown University freshmen marooned in a clump of trees 150 yards from the mainland when their canoe overturned in the sullen torrent.

The three were Hugh Miller, 18 years old; Edward Cuffe, 18, and William McLaughlin, 19, all of Brooklyn, N. Y. They clung to the branches of a clump of partially submerged trees for three hours while rescuers worked a boat through the masses of driftwood, submerged brush and the relentless currents. Finally brought to shore they were found to be shivering and scratched, but otherwise unharmed.

They had rented a canoe near the Key Bridge about noon and paddled up the canal more than two miles, to a point above Fletcher's boathouse. Here they carried it across a narrow neck of land and launched it in the river. While in comparatively slack water near the shore, they said, it struck a branch of a tree submerged by the flood and turned broadside to the current. They were unable to bring it under control and were carried down the river with it until

New U. S. Offer of Help in Search Welcomed by Gov. Moore.

COOPERATION PLEDGE IS SENT BY MITCHELL

New Jersey Chief Executive Praises Police Work in Case Up to Now.

Trenton, N. J., May 14 (A.P.).—By direction of President Hoover a formal tender of Federal assistance in hunting the murderers of the Lindbergh baby was transmitted to Gov. A. Harry Moore today by Attorney General Mitchell, who took extraordinary steps to facilitate the delivery of his communication.

The Attorney General proposed that J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, coordinate the assistance of the Federal agencies. He said if the governor would advise him of the "police official" of the State in charge of the inquiry Hoover would immediately get in touch with that authority. Col. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, State police head, has directed the inquiry from the outset.

It was learned at the governor's office that he probably would respond to the Attorney General's message on Monday after a conference with prosecuting authorities who have jurisdiction over the territory in which the Lindbergh estate lies.

Cooperation Welcomed.

Gov. Moore subsequently authorized the following quotation:

"I will write Attorney General Mitchell on Monday and thank him for his kind offer of cooperation. His subordinates have cooperated with us ever since the kidnaping and we will welcome their continued cooperation.

"Col. Schwarzkoff is the official I will designate for the Federal officer to cooperate with. He and his associates from Newark and Jersey City have worked tirelessly since the kidnaping.

"I am inclined to believe that any criticism or reflection on their work is unjustified. Although I am not a police official I am confident they took every human step to bring about the baby's return alive and that they will never relax until the perpetrators of this crime are brought to justice."

Message to Moore.

A secretary to the Attorney General in Washington reached the governor's secretary here and dictated a letter for delivery to the New Jersey chief executive.

The communication was as follows:

"As a result of the recent developments in the Lindbergh case and by direction of the President, I desire

Senator McKellar Collapses in Hotel

Menaced by Pneumonia, His Condition Blamed on Overwork.

(Associated Press.)

The condition of Senator Kenneth McKellar (Democrat), Tennessee, was described last night by hospital attaches as "satisfactory," following upon his collapse yesterday at his hotel.

The senator was reported threatened with an attack of pneumonia, attributed to overwork, as he has been studying night and day with members of the Senate's special economy committee. His physician, Dr. William E. Clark, could not be reached for a statement.

Because of his collapse, the committee abandoned plans for a meeting today, which was called in a desperate effort to get the economy bill into form for early Senate consideration.

BILLION TAX BATTLE TO OPEN TOMORROW

Senate Will Take Up Measure to Balance Budget; Bill Divides Parties.

By J. B. M'DONNELL.

Whether the budget-balancing $1,000,000,000 tax bill will be accepted by the Senate and quickly passed substantially as written by the finance committee is expected to be decided tomorrow.

The 1918 income tax schedule which Senator James Couzens (Republican), of Michigan, proposes to substitute for the schedule recommended by Secretary of the Treasury Ogden L. Mills and accepted by the committee, was discussed through the short session yesterday, and will be voted on tomorrow.

The income tax sections are the backbone of the bill submitted by the committee. If these are changed and the Couzens substitute schedules accepted, it probably will mean the Senate will be confronted with the same situation faced by leaders in the House when the general manufacturers' sales tax was voted on. Capt. Dollar in Coma And Has Pulse of 130

San Rafael, Calif., May 14 (A.P.).—Dr. Rafael G. Dufficy reported tonight Capt. Robert Dollar was in the most critical condition since he became ill two weeks ago with bronchial pneumonia. His physician said, "He has been in a state of coma for more than fifteen hours. No change can be expected for twelve hours. His pulse is now 130."

Whether the 88-year-old shipping magnate will weather the crisis, Dr. Dufficy said, depended upon his reserve of vitality. The physician intimated he believed it extremely doubtful Capt. Dollar's strength would carry him through.

GARNER SAYS 'THAW' DELAYED BY HOOVER

Charges White House Statements Keeping Minds of People Unsettled.

(Associated Press.)

Speaker Garner yesterday leaned back in his chair, fingered the stub of a cigar and accused President Hoover of having "done more to prevent the return of public confidence than any other one thing."

The silvery-haired Texan chose his daily press conference as the occasion for criticizing what he called "the unending stream of statements from the White House."

After saying he did not yet want to talk about his plans for relief legislation, the Speaker set newspapermen to scribbling when he remarked: "The President's statements have done more to keep the people's minds unsettled than any other one thing. If he would refuse to issue a statement for 30 days, I would guarantee that things would thaw out."

Some one asked whether he thought the President was "campaigning."

"I don't say that, but I think it does indicate that he wants to keep his name before the people," Garner answered.

The Texan already has been pledged the California votes for the presidential nomination at the Democratic convention. Texas, too, will support him. Campaign headquarters have

Byrd Cancels Address To Kansas Democrats

Topeka, May 14 (A.P.).—Harry F. Byrd, former Governor of Virginia, canceled today his engagement to address a mass meeting at Lawrence next Monday night after the Kansas Democratic convention.

He notified Gov. Harry H. Woodring that Mrs. Byrd had become seriously ill as he was preparing to leave Winchester, Va., his home.

Civil Liberties Union Group Is Barred From Coal Fields

Pineville, Ky., City and County Officials Refuse Admission to Delegation, Fearing Bloodshed; Arthur G. Hays, Leader, Files $100,000 Suit.

London, Ky., May 14 (A.P.).—On the grounds that bloodshed might follow their visit and a mob that could not be controlled would form in Pineville, an American Civil Liberties Union delegation was barred from the Southeastern Kentucky coal fields today.

Returning here, Arthur Garfield Hays, a leader of the group, filed a $100,000 personal damage suit against nine officers and citizens named as having blocked his progress at the Bell County line. It would test, he said, whether members of a community can legally prevent citizens from entering.

After being halted at the Bell County line by Mayor J. M. Brooks, of Pineville, Walter B. Smith, Bell County attorney and others and told it would be dangerous for them to enter, the delegation was warned here to leave within four hours.

Sheriff W. H. Steele, who delivered that warning, said "there might be trouble" if the visitors did not heed it. He did not explain. Crowds gathered on the streets here but there was no demonstration as the group departed late today.

The suit filed by Hays named County Attorney Smith; Mayor Brooks, Pearl Osborne, Chief of Police of Pineville; Walter Baker and Charles Stacey. Named as Bell County deputy sheriffs: J. A. Whitaker, a Pineville business man; W. L. Hammond, Pineville busines man; Herndon J. Evans, Pineville newspaper publisher, and Walter Mayhew, chief of police of Barbourville.

Mr. Hays charged the defendants had deprived him of his civil rights and by a show of force had prevented his going to Bell County, had conspired to do this and by which it had prevented his carrying out his duties as an attorney in conferring with Intermediary Faces Quiz by Grand Jurors on His Dealings.

COAST GUARD SEEKS BOAT OF ABDUCTORS

Sack Found Near Body New Clew in Widespread Investigation.

Hopewell, N. J., May 14 (A.P.).—Pages of intriguing details, indicative of even more important information beneath the shield of police secrecy, came to light tonight in the relentless pursuit of the Lindbergh baby killers.

An outline of the two months' negotiations carried on along the Atlantic seaboard with a five-man gang by John Hughes Curtis became public even as another intermediary, the aged Dr. John F. Condon, asserted the child's "kidnaper" was known to him and would be caught.

Then spoke up the police in the person of Col. H. Norman Schwarzkopf:

"As has been shown in Dr. Condon's own statements he only saw one member of the gang, and the description given of this man does not coincide sufficiently closely to any of those described by Mr. Curtis to cause us to draw any conclusions."

Two Men's Activities.

Dr. Condon paid a $50,000 ransom for Col. Charles A. Lindbergh to a man in the dusk of a Bronx (New York City) cemetery on April 2. Curtis and two Norfolk, Va., associates began their negotiations on March 9 and continued them until Thursday night, when the body of the child was found.

As these and other revelations were bared the principals in the tragic drama maintained an outward calm in their hilltop home. Col. Lindbergh managed a wan smile of greeting when Prosecutor Erwin E. Marshall visited the residence late in the day. Mrs. Lindbergh, an expectant mother, who wavered close to collapse last night, regained her quiet demeanor late in the afternoon.

The fantastic story of Curtis, supplemented by a sea captain's description of the boat trips he made with Col. Lindbergh, even as late as the night of the finding of the body, set a flotilla of Coast Guard craft to scouring an area off Cape May, N. J.

Craft Heavily Armed.

Officials at the Atlantic City, N. J., Coast Guard station admitted the searching vessels were carrying more than the usual number of firearms, but refused to estimate the number of boats engaged in the task.

The unexpected statement of Dr. Condon, made as he left his New York home for a short trip, was:

"I know the kidnaper of the Lindbergh baby and he will be caught. I know his name, his nationality, his physical characteristics and all about him."

This was added to a cryptic utterance of the retired school teacher as he emerged earlier from the quarters of Charles B. McLaughlin, Bronx district attorney, who has announced his intention of initiating a grand jury of inquiry in which Dr. Condon would be a witness.

At that time the 72-year-old "Jafsie," who treated with the supposed kidnapers partly through newspaper advertisements, said:

"Isn't it bad enough to be silent without being indicted for infringing on silence? Anything I might say might add to the discomfiture of a bereaved family."

Rosner's Disclosures.

The disclosures of still another intermediary, Morris Rosner, mysterious undercover man, added to the puzzling mass of data filtering through the hands of investigators.

Rosner, who appeared for questioning at police headquarters here, revealed that he took one of the ran-

Bethesda Justice Of Peace Is Dead

A. L. Moore Succumbs to Abscess; Once Arrested Gaston B. Means.

Albert L. Moore, justice of the peace at Bethesda, Md., for the last eight years, died at Georgetown Hospital yesterday following an emergency operation last week for an abscess over the heart. He was 63 years old.

Justice Moore, former tobacco salesman, who moved from Washington, his birthplace, to Bethesda, about fifteen years ago to began a noted career in local politics, gained wide publicity recently when he committed Gaston B. Means, former Department of Justice investigator, to jail for assault on an officer. Means is awaiting trial on a $100,000 extortion plot.

Besides his wife, Mrs. Jessie K. Moore, Justice Moore is survived by a brother, William Moore, and a sister, Mrs. S. J. Stevens, both of Washington. Funeral arrangements have not been completed.

Funeral services will be held at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon from the residence. Interment will be in Glenwood Cemetery.

Odd Fellows to Meet Tuesday.

The monthly meeting of the Northern Virginia Odd Fellows Association will be held Tuesday evening in the Odd Fellows Hall at Clarendon. Large delegations of both Odd Fellows and Rebekahs from lodges in Northern Virginia are expected.

LATIN TOURNAMENT WINNERS SELECTED

Alexandria Boy and Girl in Richmond Get Major Awards in Contest.

Williamsburg, Va., May 14 (A.P.).—Winners of the annual Latin tournament of the Virginia Classical Association conducted in various centers of the State two weeks ago were announced here today.

Announcement was made by Dr. A. P. Wagner, of the William and Mary faculty, chairman of the tournament committee, who said the two major awards went to Albert S. Roe, of Episcopal High School, Alexandria, and Esther Walsh, of Thomas Jefferson High School, Richmond, both winning a $150 scholarship in any Virginia college.

it lodged in some trees appearing above the surface.

The canoe was wedged beneath driftwood, which had lodged in the tree tops and they were forced to cling to the branches to keep from being carried downstream by the swirling waters. After shouting for half an hour, they attracted the attention of Arthur Daly, of 1411 Thirty-sixth street northwest, and William Davidson, of 1310 Thirty-sixth street, who attempted to swim out to them.

This was found to be impossible, because of the velocity of the stream. The fire rescue squad was summoned, and answered with ropes, and a boat was brought from the canal. Another attempt was then made to push through the thick undergrowth which appeared above the water.

Meanwhile, the three youths, clinging to the trees 150 yards offshore, could be seen only dimly through the screen of branches. A considerable crowd had collected on the marshy shores to watch the rescue work, although it was nearly half a mile from the ferry across the canal at Fletcher's boathouse.

With N. C. Robinson and R. R. Raynes, of the rescue squad, Daly, Davidson and another man worked the boat through the screen of trees, fighting the current and thrusting aside branches. Finally the boat and its crew reached a clump of trees about 20 feet from that which held the boys, but the flood ran free and fast between them. Attempts to swim this final channel almost resulted in drowning for the rescuers, but finally the boat was worked upstream so that it could be swung across the current. Miller was brought ashore first and the boat then went back for his companions.

Police Launch Fails.

A police launch attempted to breast the surging current, but, after plowing as far as Key Bridge, was forced to give up the effort to reach the marooned trio. The trip as far as Key Bridge was made in the face of the everpresent hazard of driftwood and other refuse disabling the propeller.

Above Key Bridge the river raced along with the seeming velocity of a mountain brook. J. M. Farley, veteran riverman and manager of Dempsey's boathouse at Key Bridge, estimated the speed of the stream at from 6 to 8 miles an hour.

Farley's boathouse was hit by the flood. A foot of water covered the large float and touched the keels of the hundreds of canoes racked inside the boathouse. The Potomac Boat Club and the Washington Canoe Club, also near Key Bridge, also suffered from the flood currents. Floats at both establishments were submerged and members worked industriously through the afternoon in an efforts to prevent mud and other refuse lodging underneath the floats.

Several motorboats left their moorings early yesterday as did some smaller boats, but police craft managed to corral them all and return them to safe tie-ups.

Barges Are Safe.

The seven-barge unit that broke from its moorings at the Smoot Sand & Gravel Co. late Friday, beginning a four-hour river battle that brought into play Fire Department and Navy Yard boats, was riding safely in a cove near the railroad bridge.

Three heavy scows tore away from the same company's branch dock in the Eastern Branch at Half and Q streets southeast, yesterday morning. Tugs soon brought these errant barges back to their moorings, however, and they were securely retied to the wharf there.

The water lapped over the seawall at many spots along the river bank from Key bridge down to Hains Point. It was receding, however, late last night. Several inches of mud was left at many places along the shore.

Roller skaters, enjoying the half-holiday, were forced to take off their skates when they attempted to circumnavigate East Potomac Park as has been a much enjoyed custom lately. Either the mud or the water made the sidewall along the seawall impassable all along the lower half of the peninsula.

Along both the Virginia and District shores of the Potomac betwcen Kay and Chain bridges, cottagers were caused difficulty by the rain-laden river. Many awoke to find the water swishing near their doorsteps. No damage of consequence was reported.

Rise of River.

At 8 o'clock yesterday morning, the river was reported to be 6.6 feet above normal at Key Bridge with .3 hourly rise expected until noon when the crest was reached. The gauge on the railroad bridge from Potomac Park across to the Virginia shore showed from 4 to 5 feet less clearance than usual for boats passing beneath. The river at that point is wider and the current was slower.

Park police reported that Rock Creek, descending from Maryland to enter the Potomac here, had overflowed its banks at a number of places through the park. None of the many roads of the park, however, were affected by the creek's overflowing.

Reports from Harpers Ferry, W. Va., were to the effect that the river there had dropped a foot from its high-water mark of 19.8 feet on Friday.

Failure of a searching party to find W. H. Lancaster, 38, Brunswick, Md., brakeman for the B. & O. Railroad, missing for 24 hours has caused apprehension among his friends and family. Lancaster, the father of six children, left home yesterday in a small boat on the Potomac River, on a fishing trip between Weverton and Harpers Ferry, and has not been seen since. The river became very high during the night and no trace of the missing man has been found.

CIVIL LIBERTIES BODY IS BARRED AT MINES

counsel and defendants in various criminal cases growing out of disorder in the coal fields.

It was announced copies of the suits would be sent to Barbourville and Pineville by mail for service against the defendants. Mr. Hays said each member of his group would file similar suits if this one "went through."

Feeling in Bell and Harlan Counties against outside investigators and visitors had been described before Federal District Judge A. M. J. Cochran, who last night denied the injunction the Civil Liberties group sought. Witnesses from the two counties said the residents would forcibly prevent such visits, fearing they would arouse certain elements among the miners who were on strike last winter and lead to bloodshed and destruction of property.

"The town is full of a mob and we can't do anything with them," the visiting group was told by a Pineville resident giving the name of W. L. Hammond, when it reached the Bell County border today. "The situation can't be handled if you come into Pineville."

Written Statement Issued.

He added his warning to that of Mayor Brooks and County Attorney Smith, and said decision to bar the gates to the coal fields had been made at a meeting of 15 or 20 representative citizens at Pineville this morning.

Mayor Brooks handed the visitors a written statement on meeting them at the Bell-Knox County lines in which he said:

"In denying you a permit to hold a public mass meeting in our city today we do so in the spirit of not preventing free speech and free assemblage. Our community has a right to prevent and suppress such meetings in order to prevent violence and the protection of our citizens and the preservance of peace."

County Attorney Smith then drove up and told Mr. Malone and Mr. Hays, "If conditions were otherwise it would be perfectly all right for you to enter."

Hays Accepts Ruling.

"We will accept your ruling," Mr. Hays said to Mayor Brooks. "But we think you are putting yourself in a bad light."

New York, May 14 (A.P.).—The American Civil Liberties Union today characterized the barring of its delegation from Bell County, Ky., coal fields as "ample evidence of the complete breakdown of law enforcement machinery in that State.

"In the face of the facts," the union said, "it is obviously up to Congress to begin immediately a sweeping investigation of the situation in the Kentucky coal area."

Wet G. O. P. Plank Forecast by Brown

Says Action Acceptable to Ohio's Sentiment Will Be Taken.

Toledo, Ohio, May 14 (A.P.).—Walter F. Brown, Postmaster General and Ohio campaign manager for President Hoover, commenting tonight on the apparent antiprohibition sentiment in the May 10 Ohio primaries, intimated that it would have definite influence on the Republican national convention in its platform construction.

"The national convention will adopt a plaform to which we all can subscribe," Brown said, following a meeting of the Lucas County Republican central committee. Brown said his statement could be interpreted to mean that the convention will take some action acceptable to those desiring a change in the prohibition laws, but would make no other comment.

Committee members regarded his statement as definite indication the Republican party platform will contain a wet plank.

SHIRLEY CLARIFIES VIRGINIA ROAD ACT

Commissioner Explains How Law Will Operate in Arlington County.

ARLINGTON COUNTY
BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Clar. 509. Clarendon, Va.

Replying to a letter from Harry C. Saffell, of Clarendon, on Arlington County's participation in the Byrd road act as passed at the recent session of the General Assembly, H. G. Shirley, chairman of the State Highway Commission, said that "he sees no reason why Arlington County should not receive a just proportion of any funds the highway commission would have to allocate under the plan."

Saffell, strongly favoring the county remaining under the provisions of the act, informed the commission chairman that the county board is fostering opposition to its operation in the county. He maintains that Arlington County would be slighted in the allocations by the State. He told Chairman Shirley that he wished information on certain points of the law in order that he might carry on his fight.

As to the amount of work the State will do, Shirley states:

"The policy that the commission has adopted for looking after the roads under the Byrd act is to make a thorough study of all the roads in each of the 100 counties, find out what it will cost to maintain these roads, also to make a study of the amount of construction work that has been done by the counties for the past five years in each county. With this accomplished, we will then try to make an appropriation to keep up this progress."

Saffell said the board maintains that should the county remain under the Byrd act that it will have to apply to Richmond to cross any of the roads in making water or sewer connections. He further stated that the resident engineer who would come to the county under the act would have no control over such matters according to the views taken by the county board.

This is denied by Col. Shirley, who said that the county resident engineer will have full charge of granting all permits for the laying of mains on the county system.

DUNCAN'S PROPERTY HELD NOW IMMUNE

Douglas Says Nothing More Can Be Done to Avert Realty Transfers.

Although William H. Duncan, former clerk of Arlington County indicted for grand larceny of public funds, has transferred some of his real estate holdings, there is nothing the State can do to tie up his assets in event of possible suit, Lawrence W. Douglas, Commonwealth's attorney said last night.

Records in the county clerk's office revealed that Duncan had taken this step, Mr. Douglas said. He revealed tha the and Collins Denny, assistant attorney general, representing the interests of Virginia in the financial difficulties of Arlington County, had attempted to protect the interests of the State by asking a receiver for Mr. Duncan, but that their petition had been refused.

"We gave careful consideration to this matter in anticipation of such an action on the part of Duncan," he said, "but there was no authority under the law by which we could tie up his property before a pudgment had been obtained against him in the absence of proof that Mr. Duncan contemplated making some fraudulent conveyance.

"A judgment could not be obtained against him until the audit had been completed and the amounts owing to the county and State determined. Every possible action has been taken which the law allows.

The receiver's petition was presented to the Circuit court of Arlington County on April 29, and the petition disclosed all facts he and Denny were able to make under oath, according to Mr. Douglas, but the petition was refused on the grounds that the petition had not stated sufficient grounds to justify a receiver.

Richmond, Va., May 14 (A.P.).—State Highway Commissioner Henry G. Shirley said today that $5,000,000 more was needed for Virginia highways during the coming year.

With this additional amount, he said, and by the operation of the stagger system of employment, the department could give employment to 35,000 men between now and next January. This, he said, would take virtually all the slack out of the employment situation in rural Virginia.

KIDNAPING COLONEL HELD GOAL OF PLOT

Pilot of Yacht Marcon Tells of Suspicion Caused by Gang Actions.

Norfolk, Va., May 14 (A.P.).—Capt. F. H. Lackmann, associated with Col. Charles A. Lindbergh and John Hughes Curtis in their efforts to negotiate the return of the famous flier's baby, advanced the theory today that the kidnapers were possibly maneuvering in an effort to kidnap Col. Lindbergh himself.

He said he arrived at this theory in striving to account for the various movements and constant "come-on and hold-off" activities of the supposed kidnapers. The captain added, however, that it was merely a theory and that he had nothing tangible on which to base it.

"In thinking over the strang maneuvers of the gang," Capt. Lackmann explained, "I arrived at this theory as one possible explanation. It is just a suggestion, however, and I have no idea how nearly correct it might be."

Capt. Lackmann served as pilot of the yacht Marcon on eight cruises to points off the Virginia coast during two weeks of the negotiations here. Col. Lindbergh was aboard the yacht on these cruises, all of which failed in forming contacts. On one occasion the party aboard the Marcon was hopeful of completing a contact when the approach of a fisherman's vessel evidently frightened the supposed kidnapers off. During another of the Marcon's cruises, Capt. Kenneth Whiting, of the naval air station here, was said to have sighted a boat flying the signal agreed upon as the distinguishing mark for the kidnapers' craft.

SYMBOL USED BY KIDNAPERS

By this symbol, Dr. John F. Condon, who paid over $50,000 ransom money in a Bronx cemetery, was convinced that he was dealing with the real kidnapers. The same kind of symbol was found in the original ransom note left on the baby's crib. The solid figure in the center was in red ink. The large hollow circles were drawn with blue ink. Three small holes punctured the symbol.

TERRORS OF JUNGLE ARE ANTS INCH LONG

D. S. Wees, Explorer Says They Almost Ate Him Alive in Paraguay.

Asuncion, Paraguay, May 14 (A.P.). It isn't the wild beasts that make the jungle dangerous, it's the insects and the heat and the lack of water. Donald S. Wees, American explorer who returned to civilization today, found that out during three months in the wilds of northeastern Paraguay.

Up there, he said, there are ants nearly an inch long, and they almost ate him alive. The Acaray River at flood is a terrible thing when a man has only a canoe chopped out a log.

He escaped the ants and the floods; he cut his way with a machete through a jungle of plants whose leaves have knife-like edges, and he brought back with him motion pictures and specimens of wild life unknown in the United States.

Last March, said Mr. Wees, he and his companion had been on the trail for a month when their provisions ran out.

The humidity had softened his feet so that he was virtually a cripple, but he walked 18 miles in the sun through the most forbidding country until he found some Indians from whom he bought enough to carry himself and his friends along.

One of his best pictures, he said, is of a jaguar which the natives call "tigre." He shot the beast but did not kill it.

It leaped to a floating island of moss in the river, a splendid "set" for his movie.

At Yguazu Falls, third highest in the world, he had his friends lower him on a cable 200 feet into the devil's foot cataract where he made some other fine shots.

It was a tough trip, he confessed, but he was elated at his success in bringing out a considerable number of jungle specimens.

CLEWS FOR ARREST HELD STILL LACKING

New Jersey Prosecutor Goes Over Ground Again Near Lindbergh Estate.

Hopewell, N. J., May 14 (A.P.).—No evidence is yet in the hands of authorities, Prosecutor Erwin E. Marshall of Mercer County said today, upon which an arrest in the Lindbergh murder case may be expected immediately.

He explained he was hopeful the kidnaper-killers would be caught, but this hope was not based on any facts in his possession.

Early in the day, as he started out again on the most important task of his life, to help solve one of the world's greatest murder mysteries, the prosecutor went to the spot where the body was found.

Ground Is Surveyed.

He and Prosecutor Anthony M. Hauck, jr., of Hunterdon County, went over the ground carefully. (Mercer is the county in which the body was found; Hunterdon the county in which the kidnaping took place.)

When he returned from the woods where the improvised grave had been discovered, he discussed the job he faces.

"It is apparent to me," he said, "that we must settle down to a long, grim fight to capture and to convict the man guilty of this heinous crime.

"The time is past for excuses for lack of action because of fear for the safety of the child.

Hands Were Tied.

"There did exist that condition. The hands of officals were tied. They, in proper and true sympathy with the parents, desired the safe return of the baby.

"But now we know he is dead.

"Now is the time for swift, determined action.

"I heartily welcome the attitude of President Hoover and the Government in drafting the best men of the Federal service to aid in capturing these criminals.

"I am desirous, too, of having not only the opportunity of prosecuting the murderers, but also of cooperating with other officials in sending to jail the gangsters who sought to capitalize and enrich their own pockets by the kidnaping."

He disclosed that more than 100 "determined efforts" had been made by individuals and groups to represent themselves as the kidnapers and to receive the ransom. This total, he said, did not include the "crank" letters received.

CALM MAINTAINED BY ANNE LINDBERGH

Couple Reported Planning Trip to Europe; May Never Return to Hopewell.

Hopewell, N. J., May 14 (A.P.).—Displaying unusual recuperative ability, the frail mother of the kidnaped and slain Lindbergh baby again took an active interest late today in the conduct of her desolate household atop the Sourland Mountains.

Last night her strength wavered for the first time during the long strain and a physician was consulted. At her insistence she had been told the details of the finding of her first born.

She retired early, but this afternoon she again exhibited the calm and composure that has been a remarkable characteristic of the tragedy.

"They're the kind of people that the harder things get the stiffer their backbone becomes," was the way a friend and visitor explained her condition.

Late in August she expects another child.

Both May Go Abroad.

Reports persisted she and her aviator-husband will go abroad to remain until after the child is born. One report was that they would leave on June 4 on the Ile de France, but at the steamship office it was said they had not booked passage on that ship. Another report was that they intended to go to a friend's chateau in France.

If they do leave the Sourland countryside it is generally believed they will never return to that hilltop house into which stark tragedy stalked the night of March 1.

The house had just been completed when the kidnaping occurred. It was not yet completely furnished. Until March 1 the Lindberghs had spent only week-ends there, living at the home of Mrs. Dwight Morrow, Mrs. Lindbergh's mother, in Englewood. It was at his grandmother's home that the flier's namesake was born.

May Seek Rest in Maine.

There is also a possibility, it was said, that they may go to the Morrow estate in Maine for rest and seclusion.

The wiry, lanky colonel has borne the strain of anguish, impatient waiting and uncertainty with remarkable fortitude. His direction of a personal campaign to get in communication with the kidnapers gave him an outlet for pent-up energy.

The perseverance and fortitutde he has displayed have been reminiscent of his display of those qualities on his epochal oceanic flight.

BILLION TAX MEASURE FIGHT OPENS IN SENATE TOMORROW

job of rewriting the tax bill on the Senate floor will be begun.

Senator Couzens has been gaining support for his wartime income tax schedules. Republican and Democratic leaders are standing against the Couzens amendment. They expressed confidence it would be beaten.

There is strong bipartisan agreement on the point that the administration and tax sections of the bill, approved by the finance committee, must be approved unless the gates are to be opened to a deluge of amendments. There is, however, sharp disagreement over the tariff items, and there the nonpartisan support of the bill comes to an end. It is just about every man for himself in the tariff fight, and, therefore leaders on both sides are seeking to have the tariff battle royal postponed until all other provisions of the bill have been passed on. The Democrats, at least some of the most influential, are determined on that, and have decided to force a record vote on the question of postponement of consideration of tariffs if an informal agreement can not be had to pass them over by unanimous consent.

Economy Is Factor.

Intimately tied up with the tax bill is the question of Government economy. Admittedly the tax bill will not balance the Federal budget in the next fiscal year. Another quarter of a billion dollars, approximately, will be needed. It is proposed to get this by reducing Government expenditures.

The special Senate economy committee, which is meeting with representatives of the House, Republicans and Democrats alike, is running into some of the same difficulties which were experienced in the House. As soon as any economy proposal is fairly launched, it is the object of attack. Consequently, a program of something like secrecy has been adopted as a means of defense against premature attacks. The sudden illness of Senator Kenneth McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee, author of many economy proposals since Congress convened, caused postponement of the committee meeting yesterday.

No agreement was reached on the so-called relief program, as distinguished from the purely economic aspect of the problem. Republican senators appear to be just about as lukewarm toward President Hoover's plan as were Democrats toward the surprise statement of Senator Joseph T. Robinson (Democrat), of Arkansas, party leader in the Senate. The so-called compromise plan worked out at a White House conference after Senator Robinson had announced his plan and President Hoover had said he favored some special action, too, has not appealed to the rank and file of either party in the Senate.

Disagreement in Parties.

There is disagreement among the members on both sides. Each party wants, however, to be in a proper political position in the matter. They are conferring among themselves and with members of the other party. What agreement will be reached remains to be seen.

Senator Wagner (Democrat), of New York, author of a relief measure which has gathered cobwebs in committee pigeon holes because of heretofore expressed disapproval, is trying to work out a compromise program. There is disagreement about many provisions of every plan, as well as sharp disagreement over principles. Out of the divergence of opinion, however, it seems likely that agreement will be reached on some plan of Federal relief. There is not the same pressure of time on the Senate committee as there has been on the House committees, because the tax bill is to stay before the Senate until disposed of.

Senator James Hamilton Lewis (Democrat), of Illinois, jumped into the tax battle yesterday with a heretical proposal. Senator Lewis suggested that in a period of wide business depression and unemployment it was not a wise course to impose additional taxes to balance the Federal budget immediately. He proposed a bond issue of $5,000,000,000. Out of this, he said, could be had funds to meet the actual deficit and the balance would supply funds for necessary public works.

Payment of Bonds.

The bonds would be retired by taxes imposed on future generations.

The senator's proposal is not expected to get very far in the face of the determination to impose the greatest peacetime tax levy in order to bring the country out of a business depression because no one is making any profits in business.

Senator George W. Norris (Republican), of Nebraska, urged adoption of the Senator Couzens income tax amendment. The amendment would, roughly, impose a 6 per cent tax on the first $4,000 of net income and 12 per cent on income above that. Surtax rates would run to 65 per cent on incomes over $1,000,000. Senator Couzens estimates that his amendment would increase the prospective revenue by $331,000,000.

Cohen Backs Amendment.

The Nebraskan was not alone in protesting that the Couzens amendment would not impose a burden on citizens in dire straits. Senator John S. Cohen (Democrat), of Georgia, urged the Couzens schedule in his first speech in the Senate. He talked with the knowledge that he is a new senator, but he did not want to hide behind that excuse, Senator Cohen said.

Senator Huey Long (Democrat), of Louisiana, said that anybody who had a $4,000 net income these days, after the exemption allowed in the Couzens proposal, was in such a fortunate position that most of the other people in the country would be glad to trade places with him. He approved the Couzens amendment, as did Senator Clarence C. Dill (Democrat), of Washington.

Senator Park Trammell (Democrat), of Florida, didn't like the reductions in exemptions and decried the increases in the taxes on the relatively smaller incomes. Senator Samuel Shortridge (Republican), of California, in a statement, protested against the amusement admission taxes on behalf of the moving picture industry. The tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents of admission, the senator said, would close thousands of theaters.

EDGAR HOOVER HEADS U. S. FORCES IN HUNT

to renew the offer of the Federal authorities; who hold themselves at the disposal of the authorities of New Jersey to render every possible assistance and the use of our facilities to aid you in apprehending the guilty persons.

"We recognize, of course, that the offense is not one against the Federal Government, and that the Federal authorities have no police jurisdiction over the case, but there may be many ways in which the various detective agencies of the Federal Government may be of assistance to the police of your State.

"Several of the executive departments of the Federal Government have investigating forces whose aid you desire to invoke and in order to avoid confusion it has been suggested that Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, coordinate such service as the Federal agencies are called upon to render.

"If you will advise me what police official in the State of New Jersey is to have general charge and control of the investigation, Mr. Hoover will get in touch with him. Respectfully yours,

"WILLIAM D. MITCHELL."

'JAFSIE' DECLARES HE KNOWS KIDNAPER AND ARREST IS SURE

som notes to New York and supplied a list of all persons to whom he had shown it. He was permitted to leave without surveillance.

Prosecutor Marshall, the man upon whom rests a large portion of the burden of capitalizing the police information, had a perplexing series of questions to answer.

Among them were these:

Did one and the same group of persons steal the infant, kill him and then negotiate for ransom both through Dr. Condon and Curtis?

Were there separate or interlocking criminal gangs which operated in this manner?

Other Questions.

Did the contents of the original ransom note become known to a group of extortionists who never had the baby in their possession?

Was the garment purporting to be the baby's sleeping suit—the token which was used in the Jafsie negotiations—the genuine article or a counterfeit?

In answering these questions the public had before it the repeated official declaration that positive means of identification were provided in the ransom notes received subsequent to the original demand left in the baby's nursery.

Such a premise prompted the final question of whether it might have been possible to forge whatever means of identification was provided.

As an indication of the breadth of the police pursuit authorities announced William Allen, Negro truckman, who came upon the baby's body, was being investigated and that his fingerprints were taken.

Sack Found Gives Clew.

New York authorities in their efforts to cooperate escorted James Gracie to New Jersey for examination regarding his statements that he had been in touch with underworld characters who once demanded $100,000 for the baby's return.

Meanwhile a new clew was announced—a dirty burlap sack.

It was picked up about 90 feet from the improvised grave 5 miles from the Lindbergh home, where the infant's battered body was discovered.

It was taken carefully to police headquarters to be examined in the hope it might in some way throw more light on the strange case.

One theory was that the child might have been killed somewhere else and the body transported in the bag to the heavily wooded section where it was found.

If traces of blood were found on the sack this theory might gain weight.

Curtis Stays at Estate.

Hope of finding some other clew led officials to have all leaves, twigs and surface dirt for a large radius around where the body was found, scraped up and taken to the Lindbergh garage. When the collection dries, chemists will analyze and study it.

Mr. Curtis remained on the Lindbergh estate to aid by whatever means possible in the hunt for the men he had believed were the kidnapers.

Most of Thursday night he spent telling officials the long story of his negotiations. Yesterday he was taken over part of the ground he covered during his week in Col. Lindbergh's behalf.

Col. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, State police head, told of passing on to the Coast Guard part of the story—the nicknames of the five men, their descriptions and a description of their boat.

"At no time," Col. Schwarzkopf said, "was anything given to Mr. Curtis to deliver or show to Col. Lindbergh and no demands were made upon him by any of the alleged group of kidnapers with whom he was in contact as to any additional ransom."

It had been reported unofficially that this gang furnished the Virginian with a picture purporting to have been taken of the Lindbergh baby while he was their captive, and also to have demanded $200,000 for the baby's return.

Analysis a d study of the earth found at the "grave" may furnish more clews.

A broken shovel was found at the scene during the morning, but later it was stated officially it had been placed there only a short time.

The dirt-covered shovel scoop was discovered against a tree by an investigator and at first seemed to be an important clew, but in his 3 p. m. bulletin Col. Schwarzkopf said:

"The broken shovel referred to was handed to the trooper guards at the scene by Chief Snook, of the Hopewell township police, who said he had received it from occupants of a New York car parked out on the road.

"This was turned over to the trooper in charge of the detail, who placed it at the base of a tree, where it was 'found' this morning."

(Schwarzkopf added: "The occupants of the New York car told Chief Snook they were Jersey City detectives, but were recognized as reporters who had been working on this case.")

THREE SEIZED IN FALLS CHURCH BANK ROBBERY; LOOT IS FOUND

Babcock returned to the woods at dusk on Friday night, retrieved the loot and the guns and brought them to his apartment. Unknown to the men, Detective Sergt. Wise watched him enter the apartment and kept the place under watch for two hours.

Subsequently Wise learned that all the bandits were in the apartment and, when Bacbcock returned, made a division of the loot. Of the entire amount, only $684 was recovered by police. He was not sure of their identity and no arrest was made then.

Belew Arrested First.

Belew, an employe of the Peoples Drug Stores, was taken into custody first. Then Velke was arrested at Fort Humphreys and Babcock was trapped in his apartment.

The men began a recital of their activities, which extended over a year. They admitted, police said, that they held up and robbed the following places: R. L. May Bus Terminal at Alexandria, and stole $900; held up W. S. Caylor, night cashier of the Washington, Maryyland & Virginia Coach Co. at Clarendon, on April 16, and stole $600; held up O. J. Moore, dispatcher for the Arlington-Fairfax Transportation Co. at Lacy Station on April 16, and stole $250, and held up a Peoples Drug Store in Fredericksburg, Va., on April 19, and stole $600.

For the past month, according to Inspector Frank S. W. Burke, the activities of Belew have been under suspicion. Although he received but $25 a week, it was learned by police, he lived on a lavish scale and maintained a luxurious apartment. In the course of their investigation of Belew, the detectives learned that he had been absent from work on Thursday and had reported to his superiors that he was ill.

Trio Seen in Vicinity.

Further investigation revealed that he, Babcock and Velke had been seen in the vicinity of Falls Church on the day before the robbery. These circumstances led to the arrest. In Babcock's apartment, Detective Sergts. Wise and Talley found $403 hidden in the bowl of a chandelier. Belew told the detectives that he had placed $230 in the safekeeping of an acquaintance and this was recovered. About $50 was recovered from Velke.

Further investigation of the men's activities will be made here. Their possible connection with the holdup and robbery of the Washington Mechanics & Savings Bank, at Ninth and East Capitol street, will be scrutinized. One of the men bore a resemblance to Washington's "sniper," but has been cleared of suspicion in this connection, Inspector Burke said.

Sheriff Fields and Arlington County Policemen Hugh C. Jones and L. E. Thompson took the men to Virginia last night where they were charged with robbery. Sheriff Fields announced that two of the men signed confessions and the third admitted the truth of the statements.

Three guns were found in their apartments. Velke said he threw his gun down a sewer in Washington. The sewer will be searched for this evidence.

U. S. PUSHES SEARCH FOR BABY'S SLAYERS

Unusual Activity Under Way Following Hoover Order for Manhunt.

(Associated Press.)

On the seas and in crowded cities, through banking channels and wherever rumrunning might be suspected, the eyes and brains of Federal agents heeded President Hoover's order yesterday for relentless pursuit of the Lindbergh baby slayers.

Unusual activity at the Department of Justice, where the officials were as secretive as they were vigilant, signalized the intensity of the search.

Messages commending the President's determined order of Friday, that the Federal search "never be relaxed until those criminals are implacably brought to justice," reached the White House from far corners. Sent there, too, were numbers of suggestions for the Secret Service as to how the right trail might be found.

The severity of condemnation for the criminals that is being heard here was typified by a declaration yesterday by Senator Patterson (Republican), Missouri, that "hanging is too good for them."

"Death is the only kind of punishment these racketeers can understand," he told newspapermen. "They don't mind the prospect of a penitentiary sentence, particularly when they are playing for big money stakes, but when you start talking about their necks, they can understand that."

He is sponsoring legislation to make kidnaping across State lines a Federal offense, and hopes for Senate judiciary committee action on the bill tomorrow.

Von Schleicher Chosen As Minister of Defense

Berlin, May 14 (U.P.).—Gen. Curt von Schleicher, advocate of peace between the Bruening government and Adolph Hitler, has been tentatively chosen by Chancellor Heinrich Bruening to replace Wilhelm Groener, resigned, as minister of defense.

The broad, strapping, bald undersecretary of defense has repeatedly acted as intermediary between Bruening and Hitler. He caused a stir recently when he induced Bruening to dine at his home with the former crown prince. He has been offered the post informally, but will accept only if Bruening consents to a reconciliation with Hitler and later includes Hitler's Nazis in the government.

HOOD MAY DAY FETE WITNESSED BY 2,000

Shakespearean and Greek Drama Entertain Throngs at Frederick College.

Special to The Washington Post.

Frederick, Md., May 14.—More than 2,000 persons from Baltimore, Washington, Philadelphia, Harrisburg, Lancaster and other places, witnessed the annual May Day fete, the largest and most important campus celebration of the year, at Hood College today. The event concluded tonight with a dance in Coblentz Hall by the Marionetts, the college dramatic organization.

At 5:30 o'clock this morning the sophomore class serenaded Miss Mary Rudy, of York, to proclaim her queen of the festivities, and Miss Louise Lamade, Williamsport, Pa., to proclaim her Prince Hood. Notification was made to Miss Helen Pilat, of New York City, jester; Miss Katherine Francia, of Pittsburgh, maid of honor, and Miss Patricia Sullivan, of New Kensington, Pa., best man.

At 10 o'clock the annual father and daughter baseball game was played.

The fete was held in an improvised theater on the campus in front of Brodbeck Hall. The stage built between two overhanging trees made a suitable setting for the presentation of Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

Festivities began with the May-pole dances, after which the queen and her attendants arrived and the queen was crowned by Prince Hood. The play was then given by the seniors, the framework of which was the marriage of Thesus, Duke of Athens, and Hippolyta, Queen of the Amazons. Complications arise and humor was injected by the Athenian tradesmen in their desire to present the tragedy of Pyramus and Ehisbe.

Indicted Former Clerk Near Trial

Lonaconing Heads Accept Judgment on Property of Monahan.

Special to The Washington Post.

Lonaconing, Md., May 14.—James Monahan, former city clerk, indicted in connection with an alleged shortage of $526.82 in his accounts, appeared before the mayor and city council last night and asked that a judgment on his property to cover the amount in question be accepted. This was agreed to.

The trial of Monahan has been set for Monday in the Allegany County circuit court. Monahan last night before the council charged that Robert Cook, former bailiff, and John M. Glenn, former street supervisor, destroyed records in the presence of former Mayor Thomas Allen and former Treasurer George Buckells under the protest of Monahan.

This was done after a remark: "Don't leave a thing there for them," meaning the incoming administration. This was on May 12, 1931, when there was high water and, according to Monahan, there were witnesses to the tearing up of records and throwing them in the creek. The records were the cash book and the license stubs for the year 1928-29, which Monahan admitted were destroyed.

BRAVE BAND OF 125 TO BE PAID HOMAGE

Petersburg to Honor Memory of Gray Heroes on June 9 That Saved City.

Petersburg, Va., May 14 (A.P.).—Ten days after the national observance of Memorial Day, Petersburg on June 9 will have a memorial day of its own in memory of the gallant group who saved the city in 1864.

Since 1866, June 9 has been set aside here as a day in which to pay tribute to the 125 old men and boys who held off a force of 1,300 Union cavalry and prevented capture of the city.

When Gen. Kautz, with a cavalry division of 20,000 men approached Petersburg on June 9, 1864, he found the city unguarded.

Learning of the approach of the Union force Maj. R. E. Colston and Capt. Jarvis, wounded Confederate officers, both home to convalesce, hurriedly gathered together old men and boys exempt from military service.

They marched out to meet the enemy and acquitted themselves so well against a Union detachment of 1,300 that Gen. Kautz believed he was facing a much larger number and began a flank movement.

The home guard, which had held its own until this maneuver, was thrown back at a terrific loss, but by this time the Confederate Army had arrived to save the city, a strategic Confederate railroad terminal.

Graves of Confederate dead in ancient Blandford Cemetery will be strewn with flowers this year, while descendants of the grateful citizenry of '64 recall the deed that made June 9, a holiday.

Charlottesville, Va., May 14 (A.P.). Although Virginia has shown some progress in the community playhouse movement, there are few plays by Virginians about Virginia which could be classed as native drama, Prof. H. R. Pratt, of the McIntire School of Fine Arts, University of Virginia, said today.

The School of Fine Arts of the university recently inaugurated publication of a series of one-act plays by Virginians about Virginians.

CONECTICUT BCAKS SMITH, WILSON SAYS

Delegation Favorable to Him Expected in Convention Opening Tomorrow.

Hartford, Conn., May 14 (A.P.).—Connecticut will send an instructed delegation to the Democratic national convention, favorable to Alfred E. Smith, State Chairman David A. Wilson said today, but it will not be bound by the unit rule.

Mr. Wilson announced formal acceptance by the forces of Mr. Smith and Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt of a compromise, whereby the latter will receive a minority of the State's 16 votes. The action was taken to avoid a clash at the State convention here Monday and Tuesday.

Gov. Roosevelt may obtain two and possibly four votes from among the ten district delegates, and by agreement will receive support from 9 of the 24 delegates-at-large, each of whom will have one-fourth vote.

Thirteen of the delegates-at-large will be chosen by Smith supporters and the other two—Gov. Wilbur L. Cross and State Chairman Wilson—will be considered neutral.

The roster will be named Tuesday, with the Monday night session devoted to the keynote address of Jouett Shouse, chairman of the party's national executive committee.

The compromise has diverted interest within the State to a contest for the office of national committeeman, in which Archibald McNeil, incumbent and a Roosevelt backer, is opposed by David Fitzgerald, former New Haven mayor and a Smith leader.

Although the national convention delegates customarily select the committeeman, indications were that Mr. McNeil might carry the fight to the State convention floor.

Byrd Backers See Bright Prospects

Strategic Position Predicted for Virginian if Parley Is Deadlocked.

Richmond, Va., May 14 (A.P.).—The widespread indorsement given in State Democratic gatherings to former Gov. Harry F. Byrd, together with division of support for the "leading candidates" for the Democratic nomination for President in preference primaries throughout the country, provided Byrd enthusiasts with material this week for the prediction that the Virginian will be more than a "favorite son" at the national Democratic convention.

Byrd's indorsement by the Virginia Democratic convention meeting here June 9 is taken for granted, since he has already received the indorsement of the General Assembly, the State Democratic committee, the Virginia delegation in Congress and numerous local party conventions.

It will be a "Byrd delegation" at Chicago, and the State's 24 votes will probably continue to go to him unless, and until, he seeks a change. And, his supporters say, if the early balloting fails to give any one the necessary two-thirds majority, the former Virginia Governor will hold a strategic position.

MEXICAN RELATIONS ARE BROKEN BY PERU

position chieftain and later admitted it, Dr. Rossell said, when confronted by a statement from Senora Plenge.

"He admitted it while explaining it in a way not satisfactory in any sense," the foreign minister declared.

Another phase of the controversy between the two countries was understood to be based on documents found by the police in a raid on the headquarters of the Aprista party (Popularists), which has been charged by the government with responsibility for the recent naval revolt that resulted in death sentences for eight sailors. The government also accused the Communist party of participation in the revolt.

Among the documents seized in the raid, it was reported, was a letter from Haya saying he had sent a communication into Peru in a Mexican diplomatic pouch.

This supposed letter was printed by the newspaper El Comercio. Yesterday the same paper printed an article attributed to El Universal, a Mexico City newspaper, commenting on a statement made by the Peruvian minister there and asserting that the Peruvian government had "charged the Mexican legation (in Lima) as an accomplice in Communistic maneuvers."

Frequent Political Clashes.

Minister Cabral sent a letter to El Comercio denying that any Mexican diplomatic pouch had been used for improper purposes.

It was learned on good authority that the Mexican minister and members of his staff, each of whom had been declared no longer acceptable to Peru, left this morning by airplane for the North.

The Peruvian government for some time has been on guard against an uprising. Legislation has been adopted for the purpose of breaking up Communistic agitation. There have been frequent political clashes in many parts of the country.

Severance of diplomatic relations, while occasionally one of the preliminary steps to war, frequently has no belligerent result.

WALSH WARNING ON DEADLOCK SPEEDS UP ROOSEVELT BACKERS

locked convention and selection in a "smoke-filled room" signalizes a determined drive by the Roosevelt people to bring wobbly States into line.

Roosevelt's opponents have been hoping that his reverses in Massachusetts and California, together with his poor showing in Pennsylvania, would cause several States which have not yet held conventions to remain on the fence and send uninstructed delegates to Chicago, thus endangering the New York Governor's chances of going into the balloting with a majority.

Realizing the danger in this, the Roosevelt lieutenants have been working hard seeking instructed delegations, and their reports, relayed to the Capitol here, have been optimistic.

This week, for example, the Roosevelt men expect to line up instructed delegations in Montana, Kansas, New Mexico, South Carolina, Vermont, Tennessee and Nevada. Meantime Oregon is holding a primary election, and ten delegates instructed for Roosevelt are expected from this.

Altogether the Roosevelt forces expect their candidate to get about 100 additional delegates this week.

Granting Roosevelt 40 of the disputed Pennsylvania delegates, he now has approximately 400 delegates instructed, pledged and claimed. Thus, by the end of this week, he should have approximately 500 delegates.

His immediate goal is a majority of 1,154 delegates in the convention, or 578. His supporters are convinced that if he can start with a majority and gradually add to it on the first few ballots, it will be impossible to keep him from getting the 770, or two-thirds, needed for the nomination.

Two With Majority Defeated.

Only twice in the history of the Democratic party have candidates with a majority of the delegates been defeated. One of these was Martin Van Buren and the other was Champ Clark.

Alfred E. Smith, spearhead of the "stop-Roosevelt" movement, now has 46 pledged delegates—the 36 of Massachusetts and the 10 of Rhode Island. He also has an undetermined number in Pennsylvania. Granting him, say, 36 in Pennsylvania; his present total would be 82.

This week Connecticut will select a compromise slate of 16 delegates, a majority of which will go to Smith and the remainder to Roosevelt. New Jersey will select 32, and these, while they will be uninstructed, will be Smith's to do with as he chooses.

Roughly, Smith has about 120 delegates pledged, or in sight. He can not count on many more than that, unless they are to come from the big New York delegation of 94.

To keep the nomination from Roosevelt, Smith must marshal a phalanx of 385, or a third of the delegation.

Difficult to Hold Votes.

It is not difficult to line up this 385 on paper. Such a total can be compounded of the delegates allotted to Smith and those who will go to the convention prepared to vote for favorite son candidates.

Thus, adding to Smith's 120, Garner's 90 (44 in California and 46 in Texas), Ritchie's 16, Murray's 23, Lewis' 58, White's 52, Byrd's 24 and Reed's 36, you get a total of 419.

But Smith's greatest difficulty will be in keeping all these votes together, solidly and steadily against Roosevelt.

In several of the delegations there is strong Roosevelt sentiment. It is to be found, for example, in the Missouri delegation, which is pledged to former Senator Jim Reed; in the Illinois delegation, pledged to Senator James Hamilton Lewis; in the Virginia delegation, pledged to former Gov. Harry Byrd, and in the Oklahoma delegation, pledged to Gov. "Alfalfa Bill" Murray.

Seek Second Choice Ballots.

Roosevelt men are now doing missionary work among these delegations, seeking to commit them to the New York Governor once they have broken away from the favorite sons.

It is taken for granted now that if Roosevelt can be stopped, the Smith-Raskob group will throw its strength to Owen D. Young.

Young, always regarded as a possibility, has come to the front with a rush in the last ten days. First came his speech advocating the equalization fee to help the farmer. Then came the big unemployment relief plan introduced by Senator Joe T. Robinson, of Arkansas, a plan based largely on Young's ideas.

From now until the Democratic convention in Chicago June 27, much will be heard about Young. Ida Tarbell has written a biography of him and this soon will appear. Just before the Chicago convention, Young is to make a speech at Notre Dame University.

Prohibition Fights Loom.

The Republican convention will meet in Chicago 30 days hence. With the renomination of Herbert Hoover and Charles Curtis seemingly assured, only one major battle is in prospect, and that will come over prohibition.

The drive begun by Eastern wets, now has progressed to a point where Republicans close to the President say that a referendum plank is a certainty.

Senator David A. Reed, of Pennsylvania, said to be President Hoover's choice for chairman of the platform committee, yesterday was chosen as Pennsylvania's representative on that committee. Last week Reed, after a long silence on prohibition, came out for the Swedish system of liquor control.

There also will be a prohibition fight in the Democratic convention, with Al Smith leading the extreme wet forces. Some kind of a referendum plank in the Democratic platform has been assured for some time. The battle will come on the question of how far the plank should go.

Walsh Hits 1924 Method.

Senator Walsh's attack on the "stop Roosevelt" group and his appeal for Roosevelt-instructed delegates were contained in a letter which he wrote to W. W. McDowell, chairman of the Democratic State committee in Montanna. Mr. Walsh branded the suggestion of uninstructed delegates as 'insidious." Continuing, he said:

"It is obviously a part of the 'stop Roosevelt' strategy, advanced for the most part by gentlemen who hope to see the nominee selected after the manner Harry Daugherty said, with excellent prevision, the Republican nominee would be in 920, 'in a tobacco smoke-filled room in a downtown hotel sometime after 2 a. m.

"The unhappy resulti n 1920 and again in 1924 of the selection of a candidate by a deadlocked convention ought to dissuade any Democrat from looking eagerly to the recurrence of such an issue, and litte hope is entertained of the nomination of any one of the able and eminent gentlemen whose names have been mentioned in connection with the nomination, other than Gov. Roosevelt, except through a deadlock."

Reichers Is Bound For Home on Liner

Flier Leaves Broken Plane Behind; Pilot Suffered Minor Injuries.

New York, May 14 (A.P.).—Saved from a watery grave by that hero of many sea rescues, Capt. George Fried, Lou Reichers, Newark, N. J., transatlantic flier, tonight was homeward bound on the U. S. Liner President Roosevelt. His plane, badly smashed, was abandoned where it fell, 200 miles off Ireland's south coast.

His family, their first anxiety relieved by news that the daring aviator had suffered only a fractured nose and shock from being forced down almost at his first overseas goal, had heard no further tidings from him.

Nor had Bernarr Macfadden, publisher, owner of the plane, any further news of the exploit so happily terminated when hope for Reichers had begun to waver.

Mrs. Muriel Reichers, the flier's wife, remained at her home in Arlington, N. J., awaiting further details of the flight and her husband's health. Earlier advices from the steamship said he was under a physician's care and Capt. Fried, in a radio message, said his hurts consisted of a broken nose, face cuts and other minor injuries.

The actress rushed to the hospital and found Mrs. Eilers suffering from a possible fracture of the shoulder and Mr. Eilers with a broken rib. Sally Eilers herself was in an automobile wreck a week ago.

FALL FROM LADDER FATAL TO PAINTER

Head Strikes Edge of Roof and Sidewalk, Causing Instant Death.

Plunging 30 feet to the sidewalk when the ladder from which he was painting an attic window of his home at 1347 A street northeast slipped, Arthur C. Lyerly, 43, was instantly killed yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Lyerly, who police said was a packer employed by the Armour Company, was working from a ladder which was braced on the roof of the front porch of his home.

The ladder slipped. His head struck the edge of the porch roof and on the sidewalk leading from the street to the house, fracturing his skull and causing almost instant death.

Two neighbors heard Mr. Lyerly fall. They were Charles Matthaei, of 1349 A street, who was painting the steps of his home, and William E. Grant, of 1351 A street. They rushed to his assistance and found him apparently unconscious.

Casualty Hospital ambulance was summoned and he was removed to the hospital where physicians pronounced him dead.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Katherine Lyerly and a daughter, Miss Charlotte Lyerly. The daughter is employed as a clerk at Providence Hospital.

Funeral seryices will be held from the residence on Tuesday, with interment following in Congressional Cemetery. The time of the services will be announced later.

Louisiana May Use Cotton for Roads

State Experimenting With Staple in New Type of Construction.

Baton Rouge, La., May 14 (A.P.).—Possibility of Louisiana using surplus cotton to build its highways depends on the result of a surfacing experiment under observation of the State highway commission on a half-mile length of road near Baton Rouge.

The method consists of placing a thin coating of asphalt over the road, spraying a layer of cotton canvas over the asphalt, laying a thin spread of asphalt over the canvas, sprinkling finely screened gravel and topping off with a coating of pea-sized gravel.

This method would use about ten bales of cotton to the mile and cost $2,000 for that distance, contractors say.

Atlanta, Ga., May 14 (A.P.).—Cotton will be king next week. His loyal subjects everywhere will render homage from Monday through Saturday in observance of National Cotton Week. Simultaneously, textile magnates representing all parts of the Nation will come here for the three-day convention of the American Cotton Manufacturers Association, which begins Thursday.

JIM REED FORMALLY BECOMES CANDIDATE

Missouri Democrats to Back Him as Wet; Depression Laid to Government.

St. Louis, May 14 (A.P.).—With a warning against a "present hour" danger of socialism and bolshevism, former Senator James A. Reed, of Missouri, tonight formally made his second bid for the Democraticc presidential nomination.

The veteran Missouri legislator, who was a candidate for the nomination four years ago at Houston, was the guest of the Missouri delegation, which is pledged to his support at the Democratic national convention.

"I unhesitatingly say that the ills under which the world, including our country, now suffers," he declared, "are largely due to the mistakes of government, and that the danger of blundering into the morass of socialism and bolshevism was never so menacing as at the present hour."

The presidential aspirant directed his famed oratorical shafts at bolshevism and fascism, saying: "Admitting that our industry and commerce are sick, I yet assert that the patients can not be cured by dosing them with poisonous nostrums suggested by the ignorant, who act out of the abundance of their folly, or of the demagogue who is willing to tear down the Constitution if upon its ruins he can erect a little pedestal for himself.

UNITED PARTY BEATS LABOR IN AUSTRALIA

Victory Termed Decisive for Sound Finances and Political Honesty.

Melbourne, Australia, May 14 (A.P.).—The United Australian party, headed by Sir Stanley Argyle, tonight appeared to have defeated the Labor government of Premier E. J. Hogan as returns from 65 constituencies voting in today's general election became known.

The standing at a late hour was:

United Australian party	31
Labor	18
Country party	15
Independents	1
Total	65

A total fo 132 candidates, of whom 45 were members of the United Australian party and 37 were Laborites, stood for election. The Country party was represented by 27 candidates, and there were several Independents and one Communist.

Sir Stanley, closely following the returns as they came in, characterized the trend as a "decisive victory of a party standing for sound finance and political honesty over the forces of Langism."

Premier J. T. Lang of New South Wales was dismissed yesterday as a result of a long battle with the federal government, which opposed his policy of defaulting state debts.

UP TO THE PEOPLE.

Public indignation over the Lindbergh tragedy ought to be applied to means for the prevention of crime. An outburst of fury, followed by another lapse into submission to the crime system, will do no good, whether or not the murderers of the Lindbergh child are caught and executed. The Lindbergh tragedy is not the beginning and end of the problem that confronts the people of the United States. They are faced with the alternative of destroying the crime system or being destroyed by it.

Public authority as now constituted is impotent. The crime authorities are better organized, more enterprising, better financed, and better equipped with all modern facilities. The crime system is not fettered by regulations and laws. It has the whole field of diabolism in which to work. Its profits enable it to extend its operations. Now that it has the upper hand, there is no limit to its opportunities.

The people must organize for their own protection. No well-to-do home is safe against kidnapers and murderers. No business is safe against racketeers. No city street or country road is safe to the wayfarer. Though the police force should be doubled and redoubled, modern crime methods would baffle them.

Vigilance committees should be organized in every community, to cooperate with the law authorities. Every citizen who is not himself a gangster should belong to a vigilance committee. The individual who appoints himself a vigilance committee of one is on the right track, but his efforts will be in vain unless he cooperates with others. Crime is perpetrated by teamwork. It can be defeated only by teamwork.

Only by banding together, community by community and State by State, can the people shake off the coils in which they are bound. They are now potential victims of conspirators possessing immense money resources, keen intelligence, and freedom from all restraints. Unorganized communities are mere helpless victims waiting for their turn to be robbed and murdered. The situation is an indictment of the manhood and even of the intelligence of American citizens. They have permitted the crime system to develop under their very eyes, always "passing the buck" to the law authorities, and often hampering the authorities themselves, through ignorance or malice. Now every family and every business is endangered.

The capture of the Lindbergh fiends will not end this terrible regime of crime. The people will victimize themselves if they rely upon the punishment of the Lindbergh murderers to serve as a deterrent of crime. There is too much profit in modern crime, too much temptation to kidnap and murder, too many blind and stupid communities waiting to be raided and plundered, for the crime engineers to give up their business. They will quit crime only when it becomes too dangerous to be profitable.

It is the plain duty of the American people to make crime equivalent to the death of the criminal. They can not do this by bursting into occasional fury and then "passing the buck" to a law enforcement system that is hampered for money, fettered by regulations, and operating with obsolete methods and machinery. The people must be their own law enforcement system or be subject to the crime enforcement system. So long as they fail to organize for the common defense they are assisting the crime system to flourish and destroy all.

FALSE ECONOMY.

Strange ideas of economy crop out again in the House of Representatives. A fortnight ago the House voted to continue paying millions of dollars to war veterans, even though they suffered no injuries in the war and have no legitimate claims upon the Government. This action followed the passage of a bill granting pensions to widows of veterans, regardless of whether the veterans were married at the time of the war or whether they ever saw a field of battle. Having utterly disregarded economy in both of these instances, the House has now voted to impair the national defense by cutting 2,000 officers from the active list of the Army.

The Secretary of War, Army officials and a corps of civilians warned the House that this gesture in the direction of economy would cripple the meager nucleus around which a defensive army must be built in times of emergency. Democratic leaders in the House utterly ignored that fact. They have struck a blow at the heart of the Nation's defense structure. The policy that was adopted in 1920 for adequate protection of the United States against foreign aggression will be swept aside if the action of the House is confirmed.

It is enlightening to compare the false economy which the House has approved in this case with the lavish expenditures that are made for the sake of political influence. The pensions bill would cost $20,000,000 per year now, with sharp increases as the years go by. The refusal to strike doles and double benefits to veterans from the existing law lost another $50,000,000 to the Government. By destroying Army officer personnel the House hopes to save $3,874,000. About 20 times that much could have been saved without jeopardizing national defense and without depriving any former soldier of just and liberal treatment, if the House had been considering appropriations upon their merits instead of for their political effect.

Not long ago both Houses voted in favor of special pensions for a group of deserters, sots and other disreputable characters who had been discharged without honor from the Army. Now the House votes to cut off 2,000 officers who have served their country faithfully and whose services are vitally needed to keep the military force prepared to defend the country.

Action on the Army personnel was taken in the committee of the whole by a vote of 141 to 135. The small margin gives hope that the House will reverse itself in the final vote. If not, the fight will be carried to the Senate. It is inconceivable that that body, which recently voted in favor of building the Navy up to the limits prescribed in the London treaty, will tolerate the practical destruction of the United States Army.

SLIDING SCALE FOR JOBS.

A new policy of employment appears to be growing out of the depression. Great corporations are finding it more advantageous to reduce the working hours of their men than to cut wages or to dismiss large numbers. The spreading of work has become sufficiently general in recent months to justify its consideration as a practical means of ending periodical unemployment.

A major element in the present situation is the uncertainty which stifles all commercial enterprise. It is true that a large volume of purchasing power has been destroyed through enforced idleness, but that is by no means sufficient to account for the intensity of the existing slump. Fear among workingmen who retain their jobs and good wages that they may be laid off without prospects of obtaining other work has seriously disrupted the normal demand for goods and services. Instead of spending freely for commodities which they need, nearly all wage earners are saving for a rainy day.

This condition can not be corrected so long as workingmen are uncertain as to their jobs. But when they acquire once more a feeling of permanence, purchasing demands will begin to flow in larger volume. Working hours may be reduced and even wages cut without destroying security. The grave danger that hangs over workingmen is not that their incomes may be temporarily reduced, but that they may be left without the means of sustaining life. If uncertainty could be substantially mitigated the forces of depression would lose much of their power from both an economic and psychological viewpoint.

A sliding scale of working hours might be adopted. When demands are heavy working periods could be increased to eight hours daily during six days of the week. In times of slack production and inactive business they could be reduced on a graduating scale to six hours and five days per week, or even less. A still greater variation might be worked out for partially seasonal industries. In this way unemployment could be reduced to a minimum and basic wage scales could be maintained.

TAXING THE MOVIES.

Widespread protests are being lodged against the proposed tax of 10 per cent on admissions to low-priced motion picture theatres. The House exempted from the tax all theatres charging less than 46 cents. But the Senate finance committee voted to tax all admissions costing more than 10 cents.

Only one excuse can be offered for taxing the amusements of the people, and that is the necessity of raising more revenue. An admission tax upon the thousands of motion picture theatres throughout the country is very productive and easily collected. In this emergency Congress is fully justified in turning to the theatres as a source of revenue. Most of the people who attend places of amusement can afford to pay a few cents in taxes to the Government.

It may be unwise, however, to put all places of amusement in the same class. The 10-cent exemption adopted by the Senate finance committee seems to be unnecessarily low. It taxes the only amusement of very poor people, and is a tax upon children. Surely the Senate should be able to find means of financing the Government without imposing a burden upon children every time they attend a neighborhood movie.

A compromise between the Senate and the House exemption figures seems desirable. It is a fair assumption that the 10-cent rate was written into the bill for the purpose of compromise when the measure reaches a conference between the two houses.

ALERT CONSULS.

Traveling Americans, wherever they may go, usually have reason to be proud of their compatriots in the consular and diplomatic service. Scattered over the face of the earth, isolated from home, they maintain a splendid morale in the presence of difficulties of every conceivable variety. They are a fine, upstanding body of men, a credit to themselves and to the country whose interests and people they represent.

Two of the number recently have been commended by Acting Secretary of State Wilbur J. Carr for their prompt and efficient assistance to a fellow-citizen suddenly taken dangerously ill. The official story says: "On Sunday morning, April 24, Capt. Nash, the commanding officer of the steamship Montanan, which vessel was then at sea, radioed a message to the American consulate at Acapulco, Mexico, that Fred R. Noyes, jr., the third officer of the vessel, was very ill with acute appendicitis." That was the problem. The credit for achieving its solution goes to William D. Thorne, vice consul and diplomatic secretary at Mexico City, and Joseph E. Maleady, vice consul at Acapulco. Between them and in spite of many hindrances and handicaps, they arranged to have Mr. Noyes transferred from the ship on its arrival at Acapulco to an airplane of the Pan-American Airways line and carried to Mexico City for an emergency operation. Mr. Noyes is recovering, and Robert Fraser, consul at Mexico City, brought the incident to the attention of the acting secretary as an example of the competency and humane idealism of the men.

Timely emergency aid and faithful performance of routine duty are characteristic traits of the American foreign service. There really is nothing extraordinary about Mr. Thorne and Mr. Maleady. They merely did what they thought was necessary and right. Any of their brethren would have done the same. They all deserve credit, and their friends at home gladly accord it to them.

POST HASTE.

Crime conditions call for the organization of citizens, not only to watch criminals and attempt amateur sleuthing, but to watch and support officials.

A vigilance committee should be formed in every ward of every city for the purpose of assisting the constituted authorities. Results would soon determine whether such action is sufficient.

If Col. Lindbergh will join in the organization of a Nation-wide movement to banish organized crime from this country it will give great initial impetus to the plan.

In many localities parents and children are in constant terror of kidnapers. Blackmailers and racketeers are exacting millions from legitimate business through threats and intimidation. It is an intolerable situation that can only be ended by effective cooperation of responsible citizens.

An intensive campaign by State and Federal authorities to apprehend and punish the Lindbergh case criminals is not enough. Congress should promptly pass proposed drastic laws and society must organize to assist in restoring safety and tranquillity to distracted homes.

Isn't it wonderful that there is a prospect of bipartisan recognition of the fact that there is a difference between doles and loans through the reconstruction organization for productive, noncompetitive improvements?

Democrats are wondering just how much emphasis Senator Barkley will place on his recent vote for a tariff on coal when he makes the antitariff keynote speech at Chicago.

HOW MUCH CRIME?

OLIVER McKEE, Jr., in the Boston Transcript.

By direction of Congress, the Department of Justice, through its Bureau of Investigation, began on September 1, 1930, the work of collecting uniform crime statistics. At that time there were 768 cities in the United States, representing a population of close to 34,000,000, which reported offenses known to the police in those cities. In the last eighteen months the number of reporting cities has increased to 1,333, representing a population of over 50,000,000. Boston is one of the participating cities. Because of the current interest in the national menace of lawlessness, this particular phase of the Department of Justice's activity has attracted a good deal of attention. As officials of the Department of Justice see it, the reports are becoming so comprehensive that they will soon provide an accurate index of the volume of crime throughout the United States. It will enable investigators to determine at any given moment whether crime is on the increase or decrease.

Though the project is a comparatively new one, the work was originally started by the International Association of Chiefs of Police. The police authorities of most American cities have taken a particular interest in the undertaking. For many years criminologists and sociologists have stressed the need for adequate and comprehensive criminal statistics in the United States. Before we can appraise the effect of crime upon the economic and social order of the United States, we must first determine how much crime actually is committed. Without a central reporting agency, the investigator runs into a fog of uncertainty. There are few, if any, figures available to him as a basis for comparison. By the same token, if accurate crime statistics are available, it will be of tremendous help to him in determining why certain types of crime are prevalent and their effect upon the security of persons and property. If adequate statistics are at hand, he will be in a position to isolate the factors which contribute to the increase or even the decrease of certain species of crime and to recommend whatever legislative or judicial measures may be advisable.

Statistics, of course, are not the only things needed. It has been said that a good criminologist needs to be not only a statistician, but a sociologist as well. It is of fundamental importance to know whether or not the excessive volume of crime in the United States may be attributed to the heterogeneity of our population. In determining an answer to this, and other sociological questions, crime statistics on a national scale are indispensable.

As far back as half a century ago, the National Police Association, the predecessor of the present International Association, declared that one of the purposes of the association was "to procure and digest statistics for the use of police departments." The demand for accurate statistics proceeded apace, and the international association, in 1927, appointed a committee on uniform crime records. The staff of investigators was under the direction of Bruce Smith, of New York, an authority in the field of police administration. After two years of study and research, this committee formulated a plan for the uniform classification of offenses, for the use of reporting police officers. Then, in 1930, by direction of Congress, the Department of Justice took over the work of compiling national crime statistics. As J. J. Waters, chief of the Crime Statistics Division, points out: "The ready response which the project received on the part of police officials has probably been unequaled in any other statistical undertaking on a national scale in recent years."

During the few months in which the system has been in operation notable progress has been registered toward improving the police records. Several States are planning statistical bureaus of their own, modeled on the national clearing house, and the Department of Justice officials are confident that a high degree of perfection will be reached in a few years.

Three major groups make up the field of criminal statistics—police, judicial and penal. Naturally the question arises whether police statistics are comparable in value to judicial and penal statistics. The consensus of opinion among criminologists seems to be that for the purpose of determining how much crime has been committed, police statistics seem to offer most effective help. On this subject, Dr. Thorsten Sellin, professor of sociology at the University of Pennsylvania, says: "Due to a number of variable elements represented by changes in administrative policies and efficiencies, the value of a crime rate for index purposes decreases as the distance from the crime itself in terms of procedure increases. In other words, police statistics, particularly those of crimes known to the police, are most likely to furnish a good basis for a crime index. By crimes known to the police, we mean, of course, that residue of crime reported which upon investigation will prove to be well founded. If this contention has merit, statistics of this kind should be gathered by all jurisdictions, while judicial and penal statistics in particular should be so collected and tabulated that the objectivication of administrative structure is emphasized."

Another question comes up for consideration. Do the diversity of criminal statutes in the various States and the different judicial interpretations of the common law definitions of crime in the State create a barrier to the gathering of comparable statistics? To overcome this difficulty a uniform classification of offenses has been made based on the study of the criminal laws of 48 States. As a result of this uniform classification it is now believed that the basis has been laid for a comparison of statistics in all parts of the country.

At the annual convention of the International Association of Chiefs of Police in Florida last October the strongest sort of indorsement was given to the work of the Department of Justice in compiling crime reports. The association urged its members and all others interested in the battle against crime to cooperate to the fullest extent with the bureau. This resolution, and the spirit that lay behind it, seems to assure the Department of Justice the backing of police authorities throughout the country, a backing which is essential if the project is to reach its maximum effectiveness.

The pre-Columbian Mexicans and Peruvians appear to have had no money of any kind.

Of the manuscripts of the Greek orator Demosthenes, 170 are extant.

The Emperor Caligula spent in less than a year $118,000,000 received by him from the estate of Tiberius.

Aeschylus (525-456 B. C.), Greek dramatist, fought at the battles of Marathon, Salamis and Plataea.

Asoka, King of Maghada, "one of the greatest sovereigns that ever ruled in India," is supposed to have erected 84,000 monasteries in honor of Buddha.

Julius Caesar received 23 wounds at the hands of his assassins.

Tirso de Molina, otherwise Gabriel Tellez (1571-1648), Spanish dramatist, a priest of the Order of Mercy, wrote from 300 to 600 plays, of which number 80 are extant.

The most ancient Scottish work of which we know is "The Complaint of Scotland," by Sir James Inglis. It was published at St. Andrews in 1548. The author at that time had been dead eighteen years.

Alexander the Great had his portrait "taken" by the greatest masters of the time—Lysippus in sculpture, Apelles in painting and Pyrgoteles in graven gems.

Cornell University is one of the results of the invention of the telegraph. Ezra Cornell, its founder, made his fortune in telegraph enterprise.

Richard Kempenfelt (1720-1782), English admiral, was a writer of "good religious poetry."

Sophocles, the dramatist, has been called "the high priest of humanity."

Tobacco was introduced into France about 1560 from Portugal by Jean Nicot (1530-1600), French scholar. Hence the words "nicotiana" and "nicotine."

Duce Rules Own Secret Police Corps

Ovra, Antiplot Force, Held as Efficient as Ogpu of Soviet Russia.

ROME, May 14 (A.P.).—Fascism has had to wage a constant war against hidden enemies during its decade of rule, but by dint of stern measures has kept the situation well in hand.

That "subversive parties in particular and anti-Fascists in general" have persistently opposed the regime is frankly stated in the chamber of deputies' budget committee's report on police appropriations for the next fiscal year.

The government has been able to check these activities by use of "convenient and efficient" measures, the report adds.

The document does not go into the nature of the opposition, although the steady parade of anti-Fascists and alleged Communists before the criminal courts attests to the relentlessness of the police vigilance. The plotters usually draw stiff prison sentences.

Testimony that finds its way into print indicates that the opposition is almost entirely underground, taking the form of surreptitious propaganda and organization of secret antigovernment societies.

• • • •

MUSSOLINI has his own special corps of secret police, who hunt down plotters. It is known as the ovra and, while small, is reputed to be as efficient as the more widely known ogpu of Soviet Russia.

The duce himself is minister of the interior, and, therefore, in addition to the ovra, has direct control of the regular police, numbering 11,000 for the whole country.

This figure includes plain-clothes men but does not take in the carabineers, or military police, who are controlled by the war department.

Although the economic crisis has been felt to a marked extent in Italy, it has had little effect on public order, the committee reported.

There have been some labor demonstrations of minor order, quickly settled and hardly considered of abnormal proportions.

No open political demonstrations of adverse nature were reported.

The ovra costs the government approximately $1,000,000 a year and the police $20,000,000.

Sweden Ends Digging In Vikings' Cemetery

Upsala, Sweden, May 14 (A.P.).—Further archeological digging in the enormous grave-hows near here has been stopped by the government, which feels the dead should rest in peace.

This monumental burial place, used by the Vikings of the seventh, eighth and ninth centuries, has yielded some remarkable relics of the oldest culture in Scandinavia.

Upsala University, located in the capital of the old kingdom of Svea, has recently displayed to the public some of the rich finds made at Valsgaerde.

Among the discoveries is a boat in which lies a warrior dressed in all the trappings of war, with three shields, two swords, knives and a splendid helmet, all richly ornamented in gilt bronze.

In the bow were several horses, and between them and the warrior had been placed all kinds of kitchen utensils and domestic implements.

The graceful glass cups attracted special attention of students, such finds being extremely rare in this particular period, as glass making was an art then (eighth century) unknown in the north. The find indicates that the Vikings were in lively contact with the Mediterranean civilization.

Vienna Trolley Fare Depends on Stature

Vienna, May 14 (A.P.).—Children on Vienna street cars pay their fares according to height.

Whereas in most European cities 10 years is the dividing line between half and full fares, here 130 centometers, or 4 feet 4 inches, mark the half-fare limit. Standing more than that means that the passenger is grown up.

In case of dispute the conductor refers to a yard stick carved into the door frame.

Gold Offered Greece

Athens, May 14 (A.P.).—The archbishop of Athens, in order to strengthen the national gold reserve, has offered the government all the golden vessels in the churches except those having archaeological value. Citizens are invited to do likewise and have their names written in the "Golden Book."

Arlington at Sydney

Sydney, May 14 (A.P.).—Australian war veterans, favoring the idea of a national cemetery where former brothers in arms may sleep their last sleep together, are agitating the establishment here of a counterpart of the Arlington National Cemetery near Washington.

King Meets Pygmies

Brussels, May 14 (A.P.).—King Albert, who is well over six feet, met his smallest subjects on his recent visit to the Belgian Congo when he greeted 300 Pygmies, the only natives allowed to live and hunt in the Albert National Park.

CATHEDRAL.

By ANNE ROBINSON.

Men carve their dreams in stone and lift them high,
On pinnacle and spire to interlace
Amazing loveliness against the sky.
A mighty symbol of exquisite grace,
Now, stone on stone, the great cathedral grows;
A vital thing, a vivid sacrament
Through whose white covenant of truth there flows
Man's aspiration, like a fire unspent.

Choir of the angels, graving strong and sure,
The beatific vision they proclaim;
Here beauty-carven arches shall endure,
And altars feed their Pentecostal flame.
A nation's House of Prayer, whose towers rise
Prophetic of a Faith that never dies.

YOUTHS TALLER

London, May 14 (A.P.).—Youths of Great Britain, born within the war period, are taller and heavier despite their hectic early days of rationing and air raids. Authorities agree this is due to improved school and parental care.

Two hundred postoffice messenger boys of 16 years of age in 1931 had an average height of 5 feet 6½ inches, as compared with 5 feet 5 for 200 boys from the same class in 1906.

Two hundred 16-year-old girls in the London county council schools averaged 5 feet 3½ inches, compared with 5 feet 2½ inches 25½ years ago.

"Dole" Contentment Is Providing Problem

Canberra, May 14 (A.P.).—Workless men and women in Australia are contentedly "nestling down on the dole."

The problem of this workless army, apparently content to be unemployed for life, is causing such concern in political circles that Joseph Lyons, prime minister, summoned a conference of the heads of all Australian states.

Large numbers of professional men are now "on the dole," and it is reported that they make ends meet and find the absence of worry an agreeable experience.

FROM A SENATOR'S DIARY

Being the Day-by-Day Observations of a "Member-at-Large" Set Down for His Own Satisfaction.

—By the 97th Senator

Wednesday.

THE political panorama changes so rapidly these days it almost makes you dizzy. A month ago there was every evidence that the Democratic colleagues are as much at mere ratification meeting to approve the choice of Franklin Roosevelt. Now it looks like a wide-open fight. My Democratic Convention would be a sea as they were before the 1924 convention in trying to pick a winner.

Some of the Roosevelt bandwagon boys are extremely unhappy. They are afraid to get off the bandwagon and afraid to stay on it. They are trying to find some way of riding along with one foot on the step, but that isn't so easy. Roosevelt is bound to go into the convention with by far the largest block of delegates, and yet there is a widespread feeling, strengthened by the Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and California primaries, that he won't be nominated. The Roosevelt boom is encountering the same kind of obstacles that Leonard Wood's campaign did prior to the Republican convention in Chicago in 1920. Leonard Wood got so far out ahead that the rival candidates buried their own differences and "ganged" him. The combination of Smith, Garner, Murray, Lewis and favorite sons was a bit slow getting into action, but it is showing its power now.

"Ritchie or a dark horse"—that is the prophecy I hear now. Ritchie is in an advantageous position. When the deadlock occurs—if it does—it will be found that he has an amazing number of friends among the influential party leaders who usually dictate the nomination. His weakness is that he comes from a comparatively small State with only eight electoral votes, and he will not have many votes on the first ballot. His strength lies in the fact that the leaders of Eastern Democracy like him, some in the Middle West favor him as their second choice, and the South, it is believed, would accept him.

He was born in Virginia, of aristocratic Virginia parents, who moved to Baltimore when he was three weeks old. The South can accept him as a native son.

The dark-horse contingent is growing more and more interesting. The Owen D. Young boom has been taken down off the shelf and dusted off. Newton D. Baker's friends are active again. New life has been injected into the quiet campaign conducted in the Middle West and Southwest for Melvin A. Traylor, the "homespun Kentucky boy" who migrated to Texas, made good, and then moved to Chicago. There are reports that Traylor will fall heir to Ham Lewis' big delegation of Illinois votes after the complimentary voting is over and that the Texas delegates may turn to him after "Cactus Jack" Garner tosses up the sponge. That would give Traylor an impressive start in the dark-horse class.

To cold-blooded betting men Democratic prospects of success next November are not nearly so good as they were a few weeks ago. The Chicago convention is almost certain to leave bad scars. And President Hoover's wielding of the big stick in his dealings with Congress during the last few days has had a decidedly heartening effect at Republican headquarters. He has deprived the Democrats of a large part of their offensive power by exposing the halting, ineffectual leadership of the House.

Thursday.

PUDDLER JIM DAVIS may not be a statesman, but he has proved himself one of the best vote-getters Pennsylvania ever produced. He combines the talents of Dr. Copeland, of New York, and the late Frank B. Willis, of Ohio, and the combination is well-nigh unbeatable, as Smed Butler discovered to his sorrow. I predict it will be many a day before he is pried out of his seat in the Senate. Puddler Jim stayed ten years in the Cabinet and I expect to see him remain at least that long in the Senate. A candidate who can sing songs in Welsh and play a banjo has a big advantage over his rivals.

Puddler Jim's agility in getting on the popular side of major issues at the right moment is a large asset to him. He is as foxy as any of the Western Progressives in this respect. For years, while it was considered good politics to be dry, he managed to get himself classified as a prohibitionist, though not a fanatic on the subject. Last winter Jim put his ear to the ground and caught the rumble of a turnover of sentiment. He promptly tossed his dry affiliations overboard and proclaimed himself a wet. Poor Smed Butler had to take the dry end of the argument. He lost by more than 350,000. It will be a long time before any one runs for the Senate again on a dry platform in Pennsylvania, I predict.

It's too bad Smed Butler won't get his chance to "reform" the Senate, as he promised the voters he would do if elected. He wouldn't have had any more chance of success, of course, than he had in "reforming" Philadelphia when he was safety director there, but he undoubtedly would have given us a good show.

Friday.

THERE is an axiom in politics that when a party captures control of the House in the "mid-term" election it always wins the presidential election two years later. There is plenty of precedent to support it. Outstanding instances in recent political history were in 1910 and in 1918. In 1910 the Democrats carried the House, and two years later Woodrow Wilson was elected President. In 1918 the Republicans carried the House—and the Senate, too—and two years later Warren Harding was elected President. In 1930 the Democrats carried the House by a narrow squeak, with the aid of several by-elections to fill vacancies caused by deaths, but in 1932 will history repeat itself? As some of our flowery orators would say, "it's in the lap of the gods."

For the guidance of those who want to indulge in prophecy, however, I call attention to several facts which may break the rule this year. In the first place, when the Democrats took over control of the House in 1911, following the election of the year previous, they had a sizable working majority—not a scant paper majority of five or six votes, as is the case in the present House. In the second place, they had the urbane, wise and conservative Oscar W. Underwood to lead them, and he had some able lieutenants. Third, there were no such perplexing problems for the House to deal with then, as there are today, and, naturally, the Democrats made a much better showing. And, fourth, the Republican party was split wide open with a Roosevelt and a La Follette to lead the insurgents.

A Southern Democrat, noted for his frankness, writes me: "The politicians of the South don't care much who's in the White House. They are thinking mostly of their own hides. They want a man nominated who will run well in their own balliwicks and help them keep on the public payroll. Some of them are for Roosevelt because they think he, of all the candidates mentioned, will be the least objectionable to their constituents. They aren't worrying much about getting a Democratic President into the White House. In fact, some would just as leave the Republicans would carry the country; that is, providing the Democrats carry the South. A Democratic President would mean that they would have patronage to distribute—postmasters and the like to appoint—and they realize that would cause them plenty of trouble. 'Keep on the payroll and keep out of trouble'—that's their slogan."

Saturday.

I cull this gem from the Congressional Record:

"Mr. Blanton: 'I have been here fifteen years and I have never yet seen a member of Congress take a drink of liquor—not one.'"

No, Mr. Blanton is not one of the blind members of Congress. He just doesn't get around to the highball and cocktail parties.

Jack Garner won't take the Democratic vice presidential nomination. Neither will Gov. Ritchie. There isn't going to be any difficulty in getting Charley Curtis to accept second place on the Republican ticket, however.

Tom Heflin is about to be promoted. His friends are going to run him for justice of the peace in Alabama.

Tax on Light Wines and Beer Urged to Aid Unemployment

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Having been for two years at the head of a large committee, conducting relief of unemployment in the Township of Oyster Bay, utilizing the seven Legion posts as auxiliaries and in cooperation with all welfare organizations there, both county and State, I have an intimate knowledge of the unemployment situation in that section.

Even in the country, where conditions are less acute than in large cities, we are now experiencing the most serious phase of unemployment of any period during the past two years. Should business gradually recover, as we anticipate, it is not possible that reemployment can result sufficiently to materially relieve the situation during the coming autumn and winter. It seems incredible that the American people can permit honest men and women throughout the land, seeking work, to suffer for the want of the necessities of life, and thereby jeopardize the health of millions of American men, women and children. It is apparent to anyone who studies the situation that no general provision to meet this emergency adequately has been made or is even in contemplation.

We raised and expended during the war in excess of $30,000,000,000 to "make the world safe for democracy." Can any patriotic citizen, understanding the present necessities, hesitate to approve a plan that will provide employment for a large number of our unemployed during the coming twelve months, thus preserving the health and self-respect of our citizens?

Unless some such course is taken in the near future we will be forced to adopt the "dole," which would be most unfortunate, impairing, as it does, the self-respect of those receiving it and debasing the standard of our citizenship. A method to avoid this calamity is to provide sufficient funds for reemployment throughout the land through a large issuance of Government bonds. We dread increasing the indebtedness of our country in these times and the consequent increase in taxation, yet the emergency necessitates our doing so.

Under these circumstances, why should not Congress authorize the issuance of $2,000,000,000 bonds, under the supervision of a properly constituted nonpartisan commission, in cooperation with the Treasury Department, the proceeds to be reloaned to various State and municipal agencies throughout the country for public works; the issue to be supported by a tax on the legalized sale of light wines and beer?

The revenue from this source would be sufficient to pay the interest upon and retire the principal within a few years. Such a tax would be willingly paid by our people, who, in the main, would welcome a diversion of funds from illegitimate trade to funds available as wages for our unemployed.

It would seem that even the most bigoted dry would surely have sufficient patriotism to approve such a proceeding, if convinced that it offers a proper solution for restoring the self-respect and well-being of our Nation.

The availability of such a sum for carefully designated purpose would immediately tend to increase business and restore confidence among our people and to dissipate the gloom which now enshrouds us.

It is essential that this situation be met promptly and the patriotism of our people should result in the general approval of such a proposition.

Aid for Nonservice-Incurred Veterans' Widows Assailed

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Referring to the editorial in a recent issue of your paper, entitled "The Hall of Cowards," your particular attention is invited to the fact that the World War widows' and orphans' pension bill, which is now before Congress, provides relief in cases where the deaths of the veterans had no connection whatever with their military service. This fact has not been sufficiently emphasized in the discussions in Congress and in the newspapers. If relief is given to such widows and orphans, then it should be given to all other needy widows and orphans in the country.

The Government should make, and has made, ample provision for widows and orphans of veterans in cases where death has resulted from injuries or diseases due to military service, but when veterans have left the service free from any disabilities resulting from or aggravated by their military service, they and their dependents should stand on the same footing with regard to Government relief or preferment as any other citizens.

All the disgraceful abuses of expensive war gratuities and special privileges since the War of the Revolution have been in the nature of departures from the correct principle of veterans' relief legislation; namely, that monetary compensation and other veterans' relief should be extended solely on account of disability and death incurred in or aggravated by the military service. This principle has always been applied in the cases of peacetime veterans of the United States Regular Army and Navy and of war veterans of nearly all other leading countries. It was originally applied to World War veterans in the act of October 6, 1913, which provided the most equitable plan of veterans' relief that had ever been devised in any country, before it was mutilated by subsequent legislation. Should the present tendency of veterans' relief legislation continue it has been estimated that the eventual cost of World War veterans' relief will be over $100,000,000,000.

The following principles approved by a "committee of twenty-six" experts appointed in 1930 by the then chairman of the House committee on invalid pensions are recommended for congressional consideration: "Principles of veterans' relief. In order to draw a distinct line between veterans' relief legislation which is deemed to be fair and equitable and that which is regarded as unfair and unwise, there has been formulated the following set of principles which are regarded as basic for all sound veteran relief legislation:

"1. The Government should as a matter of justice and not as a reward or bounty, provide relief to every veteran of either sex, conscript or volunteer, who has served in the commissioned or enlisted forces of the United States either in time of war or in time of peace, and who has been exposed to the dangers of war or to the hardships of active service, if the veteran has been disabled from injury or disease which has been directly and not presumptively incurred in or aggravated by military service.

"2. The Government should likewise provide relief to the surviving dependents of such former service men and women, if the latter have died while in such service or subsequently, from injury or disease so incurred or aggravated. But surviving relations in independent or affluent circumstances should not be considered to be dependents in need of relief.

"3. Veterans' relief should be such as will momentarily compensate the veteran or his surviving dependents for disability resulting from such service. This compensation to be equal for equal disabilities regardless of rank, previous occupation or length of service.

"4. Veterans' relief should be uniform for veterans of all wars, and for the regular establishment in peace times.

"5. Veterans' relief should take the form of monetary compensation to the handicapped veteran and the surviving dependents; medical treatment, including hospitalization for the veterans for disease or injury of service origin, and vocational rehabilitation of the disabled veteran, when practicable.

"6. Disabilities of veterans developed and deaths occurring after separation from the service should be compensated only of they can be directly and not presumptively attributed to military service. Evidence presented and medical findings and opinions, rather than arbitrary time periods fixed by law, should determine the service origin of disabilities in all cases.

"7. The Government in time of war should make ample provision for the maintenance of the dependents of the service men and women during the time that the latter are separated from their gainful occupations on account of such service. Persons in independent or affluent circumstances should not be considered to be dependents for this purpose.

"8. After the close of a war the Government should for a limited time during the period of readjustment assist discharged service men and women to return to gainful occupations.

"9. Government insurance to men and women in war service should be regarded justifiable as compensatory relief, necessitated by the disadvantages in which war service has placed them in obtaining insurance from private organizations."

Finnish Close Party Balance And Progress Is Discussed

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Finland's recent decision to abandon prohibition brought her sharply into the limelight of world affairs, but the discussion of this aspect of her national problems left much unsaid. Finland is by nature a progressive country. The people are orderly by temperament and discipline, the great majority being intensely patriotic. During the years that Finland was under Russia her people resisted the attempts to transform their nationality as resolutely as they opposed conversion to the orthodox church. After the fall of the Romanoffs, Finland gained her independence, but the Russia of today is looked upon as a menace to Finnish independence.

For economic reasons friendship with the Soviets is highly desirable, yet the fear of Communist propaganda causes the enforcement of many restrictions. The strong Labor party of the Left wing clashes with the Conservative farmers on this issue. The radical element of the Labor group is Communistic, but the great majority of the people continue to oppose Russia on both patriotic and religious grounds and, naturally, the land-owning classes are strongly against Soviet ideas of property. It is this fear that led the farmers, or Lapuans, to march to Helsingfors, organized as Fascists, a short time ago to demand the resignation of the ministers.

The so-called Fascist element further objects to the broad constitutional system which keeps the government in such delicate party balance. This was evidenced in the election in which President Svinhufvud received 151 votes in the electoral college, against 149 for his opponent, the former President Stahlberg. In the Diet is seen a narrow majority which permits interplay of the various groups to a remarkable degree. Social Democrats count 66 members; Agrarians, 59; Coalitionists, 42; Progressives, 11, and Swede-Finns, 21. The premier is an Agrarian.

Finland, as all the world, has had difficulties to contend with, but has handled her foreign policies with caution and astuteness. She has signed bilateral treaties of compulsory arbitration with Sweden, Norway and Denmark. In 1922 she refused to enter the alliance involving military commitments with Poland, Latvia and Esthonia. Some tension is felt in the country today due to the alleged fortifications built by Russia along the frontier, and the Russian airplanes that fly over Finland taking observations, as well as the fact that Finland has arrested and convicted a number of Russian spies operating within her borders. With all the far-flung activities of Communist agents throughout the world, it is not difficult to understand feelings of uneasiness that must at times assail small neighbors of the Great Bear, particularly in territory especially coveted as having once been under Russian control.

Wives in Federal Service Upheld by Married Worker

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Permit me to voice a plea for the married women employed in the Government service, against whom the House economy (omnibus) bill may work.

I wonder if the sponsors of the clause relative to the discharge of married workers, if both are employed in the Government service, can know the hardship such discharges would entail.

The wife of a Government worker has to augment his small salary in order to make a success of the marriage. In most instances the wife has been a faithful Government employe for a number of years before marriage. The only hope for the marriage is the assurance that each can provide for individual maintenance. Their relationship is much the same as two workers rooming together, except that the little that is saved is put into a joint coffer for mutual assistance or for the home they hope to acquire in later years. In other cases the husband is struggling through school, trying to make something of himself, so that his wife need no longer continue working. In still other cases their dependents must be cared for. The pitiful salary of one is not sufficient.

Take my case for instance. I came into service in 1918, and have served continuously for nearly fourteen years. I married a short time ago. My husband is in law school. I am helping to support my mother. We have a modest one-room apartment and are buying furniture for it. We both are making small salaries. How can we live on one? How are we going to continue helping my mother? How is my husband to finish school? What kind of living quarters can we afford if either of us is dismissed? Suppose one of us has a serious illness or requires an expensive operation. We have no relatives to fall back upon or borrow from, just each other to depend on. Am I to be penalized for being brave enough to help my husband to get a start—to try to make a decent American home. Are all my years of service to be for nothing? Shall I separate from my husband? Shall I go back to a boarding house while he goes to another, put our hard-earned furniture in storage, give up our apartment? Is that just?

And why single out those women who have husbands in the Government service? As a rule those husbands outside Government service earn a great deal more than mine, yet their wives may continue to work.

Is it fair to pick out one class of workers?

Most of the wives in the Government service are working because of economic necessity. These women are working and striving to make the greatest thing in the world—a home. Shouldn't they be encouraged in their brave effort?

A FATHER TALKS

—By EDGAR A. GUEST

The father smiled and said: "I understand them all.
When they were well and happy they seldom came to call,
When skies were bright and sunny they'd little need of me,
But now the days are stormy it's home they want to be.

"I was a bit old-fashioned when all the times were gay,
A trifle slow for pleasure, and so they went their way.
But now the clouds hang heavy and many a day is glum
And they are deep in trouble, and back to me they come."

And smiling still the father said: "Glad am I they call.
'Tis when their hearts are grieving they need me most of all.
Though long I've seemed forgotten; their love no more I lack,
They've learned how false is pleasure and care has brought them back."

THE DIPLOMATIC POUCH

—By HAROLD J. T. HORAN

To a Martyred President.

PRESIDENT and Mrs. Hoover attended the solemn mass at St. Matthews Church last Friday in honor of the martyred President of France, Paul Doumer. The ceremony was one of the most brilliant in the diplomatic history of the Capital; flags of France and the United States hung draped in mourning on both sides of the altar and the presence of Archbishop Curley in the pontifical chair gave an added dignity to the occasion.

The introducer of ambassadors, Warren Delano Robbins, handled the delicate matters of protocol with his usual discretion and finesse. Most of the diplomats had worn their uniforms and the brilliant gold braid, plumed hats and clanking swords, hung rather incongruously on diplomatic frames, made a panorama of color and eclat.

One feature of the ceremonies had been very thoughtfully planned in advance by Mr. Robbins. The various ceremonies of the church entail reciprocal ceremonies by the congregation. At certain appointed times it is necessary to stand up, to kneel down, to sit down. For the guidance of the President, Acting Secretary of State Castle and others unfamiliar with the ceremonies, Mr. Robbins had placed an altar boy in front of the first pew.

On a similar occasion King Edward was the victim of a cruel deception which he never forgave. The master of ceremonies of the court had supervised the details of mass at Westminister Cathedral, where the king was to be present.

One of the nephews of the Duke of Norfolk was designated to sit in the first pew to enable King Edward to follow the ceremonies with the proper moves. Unfortunately the young man dropped his handkerchief and stooped over to pick it up and the king, thinking that was part of the ceremony, did likewise to the great stupefaction of every one else in the Cathedral.

When the faux pas had been explained to him some time after, the Edwardian wrath caused the youth to be banished from all future levees.

Melomanes.

THE musical season of the Capital has come and gone and a gentle pall, reminiscent of Schubert's "Du Bis die Ruhe," settles over the little group of melomaniacs in the Diplomatic Corps who have faithfully followed the operas and concerts of the past season. The members of the musical coterie include the Minister of Albania, Faik Konitza; the Hungarian Minister, Count Szechenyi; the Roumanian Minister, Charles Davila, and his financial counselor, George Boncesco; Polish Ambassador Filipowicz, Count Marchetti, industrious counselor of the Italian Embassy, and the counselor of the Dutch Legation,, L. G. van Hoorn.

Minister Konitza, the learned diplomat from the Albanian kingdom, has been the guest speaker before many clubs and organizations here and throughout the United States on the lives of famous composers. M. Boncesco is a friend of many operatic and concert stars and has given many parties for Hans Kindler, the brilliant conductor of the Washington Symphony Orchestra, who has made such a phenomenal success after his first season here.

Dutch Couselor van Hoorn thinks nothing of going 200 miles for a symphony and when the Colonne Concerts last year gave a first performance of Ravel's Concerto for Violon and orchestra, he seriously thought of making application for a leave to go to Paris and back just to hear the music. Not with such a pragmatist as Minister van Royan, however—and so, the desolate van Hoorn bought a record of the piece, and stayed home.

Unhappily the diplomatic corps of the Capital boasts but one musician in the practical sense of the term. That is the minister from Guetamala, Don Adrian Recinos. Minister Recinos is a pianist of rare feeling and technique. He is particularly known for his effective interpretations of the tenuous music of Claude Debussy.

Rumor hath it that the minister from Egypt, Sesostris Sidarouss Pasha, is a flute player of verve and agility as also the report that Roberto Melendez, the Charge d'Affaires of El Salvador, is an accordionist of merit, but in the absence of corroborative evidence, these reports must remain the realm of apochrypha.

Keeping Fit in Teheran.

FROM the rose-petalled ambient of Shiraz, American Minister to Persia Charles C. Hart has just delivered himself of a diatribe against the British passion of "keeping fit." "Charley" Hart is one of the most popular members of the American diplomatic service and before being appointed to Teheran, he was for many years Minister to Albania.

Minister Hart, from his cool courtyard in the land of Omar, views with placid eye and pitying heart the frantic antics of his colleagues who believe it necessary for their health's sake to ride ten miles on a hot day into the mountains or chase a little white ball around a ten-acre lot without benefit of siesta. "My diversion," wisely quoteth the minister, "is the soothing pastime of studying Persian art."

Such frankness has aroused considerable interest in England, where one important British newspaper did a long editorial on the ideas of the American diplomat. The editorial declared:

"Minister Hart reports more in sorrow than in anger that several Americans have succumbed to the British heresy that 'self-preservation depends on self-manhandling' and adjures those who have not fallen under the spell to give this particular form of 'slow suicide' a miss."

Wallace S. Murray, now chief of the division of Near Eastern affairs of the State Department, was one of the most ardent apostles for the athletic renaissance of Teheran. However, another American now in the department of state, Henry Serrano Villard, belongs to the contemplative school of Teheran along with Minister Hart. He was in the Persian capital for two years and managed to finish two books while there and to turn out a very authoritative monograph on the origin of wheat.

VITAMIN MANGO

London, May 14 (A.P.).—Alphonso, the mango, bids for the world's first prize for vitamins.

The mango, which grows primarily in India, is known as the yellow, squashy, juicy fruit that can only be eaten with safety in a bath. Its new honors are accorded in a report by the British scientists, Miss Edith Perry and Dr. Solomon Zilva.

Recalling that all mangoes are known to be rich in vitamins, they say that Alphonso, the richest variety of the fruit, is "one of the most potent" known natural sources of vitamin C, which protects against scurvy.

Prince of Wales' Qualities Praised

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Great Britain may never have another king, but if she does and the man is the present Prince of Wales, the chroniclers of the reign doubtless will have some interesting tales to record. The prince is, by general consent, the best news value in England today. As king he would be even more attractive.

A small, neatly-compact man, lithe and active, sensitive and nervously alert, the prince moves about the country rapidly and purposefully. He is requested to grace every sort of occasion, and motors and planes are available to transport him over long distances at a moment's notice. A typical day consists of two or three engagements in London in the morning, several in the early afternoon at Manchester, Sheffield, Liverpool, Bristol or some other relatively remote city, and several in the late afternoon or early evening in London again or in Edinburgh or Cardiff or even in Dublin or Paris.

The prince is the greatest traveler of his country and time; he is constantly en route from one appointment to another. Personal convenience seems to matter not at all. He is tireless as well as utterly devoted. Yet he does not presume to take himself very seriously. Decisive, sure, convinced, perhaps even stubborn in his views of other men and things, he also is conspicuously modest and unpretending. When people praise him to his face, as they sometimes do, he is noticeably bored.

It is the spirit of fun in his heart that, more than any other quality, makes him loved by his people. At a school reception recently a little fellow exuberantly burst out: "I have a new tie." The prince instantly confessed: "So have I." And the two compared neckwear. At the same meeting, the prince accidentally trod on the foot of a small lad named Patrick. "I'm so sorry, Patrick," he said. "Now you can tread on mine." And Patrick did.

The prince, it is commonly alleged, is not at all anxious to attain the throne. He is distinctly a modernist, and the trappings of kingship make no appeal to him. But he is devoted to England and the empire, and if duty commands him to serve his flag by wearing the crown, he will obey. The people admire George V, and are intensely loyal to him. But they have a special affection for the king's son which has little to do with politics or government and really traces back to nothing more than the charm and graciousness, the unselfishness and generosity of the prince himself.

ALDEN WARD.

Reds Want Soldiers in Manchuria

Soviet Likely to Insist That She Help in Protecting Eastern Railway.

(Associated Press.)

SOVIET RUSSIA'S insistence upon the right to send Soviet forces into Manchuria to maintain service on the Chinese Eastern Railway, in which it has a half interest, is a development which would not surprise Far Eastern experts.

In fact such action by the Moscow Government has been expected for weeks by foreigners living in Harbin and other parts of the Orient who have been watching the revolutionary outbreaks along the 700 miles of the Chinese Eastern Railway across northern Manchuria, the vital link in Russian communications between Vladivostok and western Siberia.

Japanese troops are battling east of Harbin to keep this railway open from Harbin to the Siberian boundary at Pogranichnaya, roughly 300 miles. But it was cut by the fighting April 23, about 100 miles east of Harbin. Japan has sent 10,000 soldiers into the railway zone and 5,000 more along the Sungari River in an effort to sweep the rebellious Kirin troops out of the area north of the railway in this section.

• • • •

REPORTS from Tokyo estimate the guerrilla forces at 20,000. Foreign military experts believe this estimate is too high. But the marauders are chiefly skilled horsemen, who harass the railway and refuse to offer battle. They disappear into the wild country to the north when confronted by Japanese troops and live by plundering the farms.

Japan justifies her presence in Manchuria on the ground that she must protect Japanese lives and property. But the main line of the Chinese Eastern Railway is a zone shared equally by the Chinese government at Nanking and Soviet Russia, and failure of the Japanese to keep this line in operation is creating great uneasiness in Moscow.

Soviet Russia refuses to recognize the Pu-Yi government, which theoretically rules Manchuria. In accepting representatives of that government as railway officials in succession to the officials of the Nanking government, Karakhan, the Russian vice commissar of foreign affairs, made it clear that Russian cooperation with the new officials was not to be interpreted as recognition of the new government set up with Japanese support.

• • • •

IN other words, Moscow's position is that the Nanking government is still half-owner of the Chinese Eastern Railway in spite of the fact that Russia consented to have its officials work temporarily with representatives of the Chang-chun regime in an effort to keep the railway in operation.

Were Russia to insist upon sending troops to police the Chinese Eastern Railway, Japan would undoubtedly object, and serious complications might result. But Soviet Russia's interests are suffering badly from the interruption of service, and unless Japan manages to reestablish and maintain service along Russia's key line, upon which the trade of Vladivostok depends, Moscow will inevitably protest vehemently. It may even insist that it must send troops to protect Russian interests, just as Japan has done.

Post of Executioner Refused to Women

Budapest, May 14 (A.P.).—The post of government executioner, vacant through the death of Antony Kozarek, brought more than 100 applications for this job.

Outstanding among these were the letters of three Hungarian women. One of them wrote: "As men have always disappointed me I think I am especially fitted for this position. I will regard it as a chance to take revenge for the ills done me by men, and promise to be a good and reliable executioner."

Her promise, however, was not accepted. Johann Kovacs finally got the job.

Upper Classes Join London Police Force

London, May 14 (A.P.).—London's police force is attracting more and more men from Britain's upper classes.

An admiral's son on the metropolitan police force is working for $15 a week, and a jailer at one of the London police courts owns a fine motorcar and motorboat.

The son of a well-to-do vicar is a modest policeman in a southern London suburb, with his small salary supplemented by a handsome paternal allowance.

Mute Given 15 Cents to Aid Gandhi Cause

Bombay, May 14 (A.P.).—A deaf and dumb man was arrested here while he was trying to address a crowd of Gandhi's disciples by signs.

The police had to use signs to question him.

They said they learned he had been given a red shirt, blue trousers, a tricolored cap, an illegal congress flag and 15 cents in cash and then sent out to preach the doctrine of Indian independence.

German "Tea Party"

Cologne, May 14 (A.P.).—A gesture against high taxes, rivaling the Boston "tea party" of American history, took place at Opladen where unidentified citizens, under cover of night, held a "brick party" and sealed up the door of the tax collector's office with masonry.

Paris Fills Old Moat

Paris, May 14 (A.P.).—The last visible reminder that Paris once was a fortified city vanished when workmen filled in the sole remaining section of the moat in the Passy district, adjoining the Bois de Boulogne.

Swedes Add to Navy

Stockholm, May 14 (A.P.).—Sweden has added two fast destroyers to her navy, the "Klaes Horn" showing almost 38 knots on her speed test and the second boat nearly that much.

GROUP PLANS TOUR OF HISTORIC SPOTS

Association for Preservation of Virginia Antiquities Leaving Tuesday.

Fredericksburg, one of the most historic cities in the country, is to be the destination this year of the annual pilgrimage of the Association for the Preservation of Virginia Antiquities on Tuesday.

Until 1783, Fredericksburg was the scene of events military, legislative and social, significant in the drama of affairs during and after the Revolution. Interesting testimony of this fact may be seen in the Rising Sun Tavern, in Fredericksburg, built and owned by Washington's brother, Charles, and in the house and law office of James Monroe, to be opened especially for the pilgrimage through the courtesy of Mrs. Rose Gouveneur Hoes, the great-granddaughter of James Monroe.

Monroe's dueling pistols, and his court dress worn at the court of Napoleon when negotiating the Louisiana Purchase, also Mrs. Monroe's gowns worn at the courts of Europe—all are reminiscent of stirring events then occurring at home and abroad.

Other Historic Places.

Connected with events of this period the Rising Sun Tavern holds Thomas Jefferson's desk, the banquet table at which the great of that day dined, and the room and bed where Lafayette slept on his visit to Fredericksburg. Also in Mary Washington's garden is the box bordered walk where, in 1781, on his return from Yorktown, it is known that Washington's mother first greeted Lafayette on his important visit.

The Sentry Box, the home of Dr. Hugh Mercer's widow, and later of Gen. Weedon, and the pharmacy of Dr. Hugh Mercer, the hero of the Battle of Culloden, from the year 1763, fairly reek with memories of those souls who made history then with those associated with them, as does also Kenmore, the home of Col. Fielding Lewis, maker of the first guns of the Revolution, with its mantels designed by George Washington and executed by Hessian prisoners.

On part of the Kenmore property is the monument to Mary, Washington's mother, the first monument to a woman by women, and the Masonic graveyard where is buried Lewes Littlepage, the confidential adviser to the last King of Poland—all these and many other interesting spots make Fredericksburg worthy as the objective of the pilgrimage.

Patrons and Patronesses.

The list of patrons and patronesses for the pilgrimage of the Association of Virginia Antiquities include: Senator and Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, Senator and Mrs. Carter Glass, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Cary T. Grayson, Bishop and Mrs. James Freeman, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Herrick, Mr. and Mrs. Wade Hampton Ellis, Mrs. Violet Blair James, Mrs. Virginia White Speel, Mrs. Howard L. Hodgkins, Mrs. Merritt O. Chance, Mrs. A. R. Shands, Mrs. M. de Clare Berry, Miss Mary Ambler, Mrs. Ryan Devereux, Mrs. J. Jerome Lightfoot and Mrs. Mary Duncan Abbe.

After visiting Rippon Lodge, Aquia Church and historic places in Fredericksburg as well, Federal Hill, the estate of Mr. Keim, and Brompton, the Marye home, once Lee's headquarters, and the gardens of Chatham, the last stop of the day will be the Masonic Memorial in Alexandria, opened at 6 p. m. for this occasion.

In case of rain, the trip will be made the next day.

Mrs. C. Rust Smith, at the Shoreham Hotel, is the directress of the Washington branch of the association sponsoring the pilgrimage.

Students to Seek Flag Design Prize

Three Awards Are Offered in Contest of All States Officers' Society.

High school students have been invited to compete in a contest to create a design for a flag or banner for the All States Officers' Society of Washington. The contest is being conducted by the Community Center Department in cooperation with the art department of the schools, under the direction of Miss Ethel Bray and R. N. Hampton.

All designs must be in the office of the Community Center Department in the Franklin School by 5 o'clock on the afternoon of June 2. A board of judges, composed of prominent artists, will pick the winners on June 4, and the awards will be made on or before Flag Day when the winners will be entertained by the All States Officers' Society.

First prize will be $25; second, $10; third, $5. Certificates of honorable mention will be given to the next ten best designs. Enrollment blanks and full instructions have been furnished art teachers and principals in high schools. Full information and literature may also be obtained from Mrs. Elizabeth K. Peeples of the Community Center Department.

EDITOR IS EXPELLED BY BUSINESS GROUP

Charlottesville Man Held to Have Violated Rules in Criticizing City.

Special to The Washington Post.

Charlottesville, Va., May 14.—Freedom of the press received an indirect jolt in the shadow of the shrine of Thomas Jefferson last night, when Harry Goodman, managing editor of the Charlottesville Guide, a weekly tabloid published here, was expelled from membership in the Young Men's Business Club of Charlottesville on charges of "a violation of the cardinal principles" of the club, by publishing over his signature certain articles criticizing the city's administration.

By a vote of 77 to 26, the Young Men's Business Club which is a civic organization with the stated object "to discuss and study business, civic, State and National subjects," sustained the charges against Mr. Goodman and pronounced his expulsion on the ground that his adverse criticisms of the city government had violated the club's cardinal principles as expressed in its motto, "You Must Boost Charlottesville."

In addition to his position as managing editor, Mr. Goodman contributes a free-lance column to the Charlottesville Guide under the caption, "What I Would Do." Several months ago the author of this column opened an attack on the city administration, charging extravagance in the expenditure of the taxpayers' money, multiplicity of offices, and clandestine procedure in the handling of municipal affairs. A welter of controversy grew out of the Goodman articles which culminated in the action taken by the Young Men's Club.

C. Armande Paxson, Charlottesville attorney, who brought the charges before the meeting on behalf of the executive committee of the club, stated that the truth or falsity of Goodman's strictures upon the city government was not involved in the issue presented to the club. The case for expulsion was rested upon excerpts from several of Mr. Goodman's published articles, which were read to the assembly, and no evidence as to the justification of the statements of fact and opinion they contained was introduced.

HEY, SKINNEY! CIRCUS IS COMING TO TOWN

Big Tent to Be Hoisted Today; Hundreds of Thrills Are Promised.

Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Circus arrives in Washington today. The big show will unload at Benning and march to the show grounds at Fifth street tnd Florida avenue northeast. The circus will arrive shortly before noon in four complete trains of double length steel railroad cars.

Hundreds of thrills are promised this year. From Russia comes Tamara, sensational aerialist and star of the European capitals; from India comes Bombayo, the world's greatest bounding rope expert. Former Governor To Address Club

Cooper of South Carolina, to Tell Cosmopolitans of Campaign Issues.

With a view to placing both sides of the political situation before the members of the Cosmopolitan Club, L. E. Rubel, of the forum committee of that organization, has arranged to have former Gov. Robert A. Cooper of South Carolina, now special assistant to Democratic Chairman Jouett Shouse, as guest speaker at Thursday's meeting of the club. A speaker from the Republican national committee will be heard June 2.

Gov. Cooper, who is considered to be one of the best-informed men on present-day politics in the Democratic ranks, will undertake to show that efficiency in government results from distribution and not from consolidation of the powers of government. He will insist that public liberty is menaced as government becomes centralized.

The club will hold its annual memorial service at the meeting of Thursday, May 26.

Tuberculosis Campaign Is Held Public Concern

Every possible form of communication has been used by the Tuberculosis Association to bring home to the public that "Tuberculosis Causes Tuberculosis," said Dr. Arthur C. Christie, chairman of the early diagnosis committee of the Tuberculosis Association, in his report of the campaign, made public yesterday.

Dr. Christie said the aim of the association, "in this period of economic stress," has been to encourage the better reporting of known cases by physicians and nurses, and the discovery of hitherto unknown sources of infection. Posters in street cars, stores, hotels, offices and other public places have been displayed. Radio addresses have been broadcast and much publicity has been given to the campaign in the press, he said.

Sing Sing Prisoner Flees in Trash Can

Robber Serving 20 Years Conceals Himself in Truck and Escapes.

Ossining, N. Y., May 14 (A.P.).—A bottomless trash can, fitted into the top of another can, carried Michael Miller, 31 years old, through the guarded gates of Sing Sing to freedom yesterday.

The method of his escape was learned today when prison officials checked a truck load of trash cans sent to a New Jersey plant to be galvanized. They found among them two extras, one without bottom.

In the tube made by fitting together the cans, each 3½ feet deep and 3 feet in diameter, Miller had stood concealed from the guards as the truck rolled onto the highway outside the prison yesterday morning. A few miles from the prison, officials learned, a laborer saw him leap from the truck and flee.

Miller, who was serving a twenty-year sentence for robbery on a conviction in Manhattan, was first missed at the 10:30 check-up last night.

Richmond, Ind., May 14 (A.P.).—The importance of international law in its relation to the various nations was stressed by Fred K. Nielsen, American commissioner on the American-Mexican claims arbitration commission, in an address last night at the third Earlham Institute of Polity.

An address was delivered at this morning's session of the institute by Green H. Hackworth, legal adviser of the Department of State. He discussed his work in connection with Latin America and the Orient. Chester D. Puglsey, of Peekskill, N. Y., sponsor of the institute, described the purpose and accomplishments of the meeting.

Baltimorean Convicted of Murder.

Camden, N. J., May 14 (A.P.).—William Doughty, 30, of Baltimore, was convicted of murder in the first degree today in connection with the shooting of George McGuire, 60, former justice of the peace in Ellisburg. The jury recommended life imprisonment. McGuire was killed in April, 1931, when he surprised Doughty robbing the McGuire home.

Two Sentenced For Matricides

Dentist and Youth Get Prison Terms for Slaying Mothers.

Seattle, Wash., May 14 (A.P.).—Dr. Albert G. McKeown, Seattle dentist, and Leslie Barrett, 19, were sentenced to prison today for slaying their mothers.

Dr. McKeown, who beat his 81-year-old mother, Mrs. Rhoda McKeown, of Muscatine, Iowa, to death in the basement of his home here March 1, was given a 12 to 25 year term by Superior Judge Robert S. Macfarlane on a conviction of second degree murder.

Barrett was sentenced to 5 to 20 years. He killed his mother, Mrs. Lucy O'Brien, during a drinking party here March 2.

Dr. McKeown, who pleaded temporary insanity, stood silent after Judge Macfarlane pronounced sentence, but his wife cried out:

"Oh, God, is there no justice?"

HOOVER DEFENDED AS HUMANITARIAN

Judge Remick Answers Attacks on Man Democrats, Once Would Own.

By JAMES W. REMICK
(Former Justice of the Supreme Court of New Hampshire).

Less than 15 years ago the New York World, then the leading Democratic paper in the United States, was advocating the nomination and election of Herbert Hoover to the Presidency because of what he had achieved and what he was. Town meetings, college faculties and other representative bodies throughout the United States were then resolving unanimously and regardless of party in favor of his nomination and election.

We were in full sympathy with that movement and did what we could to advance it. Later when Herbert Hoover decided to be a Republican candidate for the Presidency in the national convention which nominated Warren Harding, we went to Chicago to help bring about his nomination. When, in 1928, he was overwhelmingly nominated and elected to the Presidency, our joy was unconfined. As President, under the most trying conditions, he has measured up in ability and character to the high estimate placed upon him by the New York World and millions of Democrats when they were seeking to make him their candidate for President.

But, in the transition of politics those who then lauded him are now belittling him. A short time ago one of the leading Democrats of the United States, a former governor of one of our great Commonwealths and once himself a presidential candidate, speaking over the radio to millions of his countrymen said, contemptuously, in substance, that President Hoover was only a mining engineer and a poor one at that, that what the country needed was a humanitarian engineer.

Record As Humanitarian.

As far back as the time of the Boxer uprising in China, Herbert Hoover was a humanitarian engineer to the men, women and children of America and other lands who happened to be in China and whose lives were threatened by that uprising. When the World War broke out, Herbert Hoover was a humanitarian engineer to his countrymen who found themselves stranded in the war zone. Before the United States entered the World War, Herbert Hoover was a humanitarian engineer to the starving population of Belgium, and after we entered it he engineered the stupendous humanitarian work of producing and distributing the food necessary for feeding our own and allied armies and winning the war.

Since the war, whenever calamity has come upon the Nation, whether in the Mississippi Valley among the mountains of New England or elsewhere, Herbert Hoover has had charge of the forces of relief and directed the processes of rehabilitation.

When the stock market crash and strikes, shut-downs, wage cuts and consequent disaster threatened the Nation, Herbert Hoover was the humanitarian engineer who brought the leaders of labor and capital together in conference, pledged them to abstain for the time being from strikes and wage reductions and thereby averted results, the seriousness of which can not be measured. Later, when economic collapse and Bolshevism threatened the world, it was the moratorium of Herbert Hoover which averted a crisis too appalling to contemplate.

Solicitude for Childhood.

Herbert Hoover was the humanitarian engineer who successfully guided the Nation through the unemployment crisis in 1921. With the same constructive genius he is battling with the present unemployment crisis. True, his proposals stop short of a dole from the national Treasury—a palliative which proved so disastrous to Great Britain and which would leave the problem of unemployment here still unsolved. The measures proposed by Herbert Hoover and largely adopted by a Democratic Congress, seek rather to do away with unemployment and safeguard against its recurrence by setting and keeping in motion the wheels of industry through restored credit and confidence without which permanent relief can not come either to the "little fellow at the bottom" or to the big fellow at the top.

In recognition of Herbert Hoover's humanitarian services, the world's greatest humanitarian organization—the American Red Cross—made him its president and he is still its honorary head cooperating in all its humane work.

In a spirit worthy of Him who said, "Whoso shall receive one such little child in My name receiveth Me"—Herbert Hoover, as President, has made the child life of America his special solicitude and heartened the child welfare workers of the Nation by his sympathetic cooperation.

From the time Herbert Hoover assumed the Presidency until the present hour, he has striven by example, precept, and all the powers of his great office to uphold the Constitution and laws of his country against every form of lawlessness, and during the same time has striven with all the resources at his command to safeguard mankind against the misery and waste of future wars.

Confidence in People's Sense.

What other man can present such a record of humanitarian ideals and humanitarian engineering? In the light of such a record the slur cast upon his humanitarianism seems paltry and unworthy of the distinguished Democrat who uttered it.

Weighed down with responsibilities, unbearable by a weak man, impeded by a combination of adverse circumstances which would have driven another to despair, lied about and persecuted as Washington and Lincoln were lied about and persecuted, he has met the situation with the patience and fortitude of Washington at Valley Forge and of Lincoln in the darkest days of the Civil War. Scorning everything like demagogism, opportunism or pussyfooting, with his hands firmly upon the wheel and his eyes fixed upon the North Star, unswerved by false lights on the shore and undaunted by threatened mutiny on board, he is calmly, courageously and confidently riding the storm.

The political skies were darker for Lincoln in the middle of his first administration than they have ever been for Herbert Hoover. The Americal people then had too much sense to swap horses crossing the stream, and Lincoln was overwhelmingly reelected, so I believe the American people today are too sensible and too patriotic to swap pilots in a storm, especially when the pilot we have has done and is doing as much and more than any other man could do to weather the storm and bring the ship of state with its priceless cargo safely to port.

RAINEY SEES DOLE IF SLUMP GOES ON

Says Solution Is End of U. S. Isolation Policy in World Trade.

(Associated Press.)

Representative Rainey, the Democratic leader, said in a formal statement yesterday that "a dole in this country is inevitable unless we can restore international trade."

His statement was a comment on Friday's appeal to President Hoover of the Railway Brotherhoods, urging a 25-year moratorium on foreign debts with a cancellation system based on imports of United States goods.

Rainey said this plan, which is similar to that proposed by Alfred E. Smith, Democratic presidential nominee in 1928, "points out exactly the reasons for the unfortunate economic condition in which this country now finds itself."

U. S. Policy Blamed.

"They correctly call attention to the fact," said the House majority chieftain, "that our policy of isolation is responsible for the fact that our railroads and our industries are discharging men and reducing salaries.

"The nations of the world are interdependent and they must trade with each other. Foreign nations owe us immense amounts and they can not pay us in gold. They can only pay us in goods and our foolish policy of isolation makes this impossible.

"The flight of American capital is proceeding with alarming rapidity and it is seeking investment now beyond foreign tariff walls, employing hundreds of thousands of foreign laborers. No wonder 8,000,000 unemployed walk the streets of our cities.

Stresses Trade Advantages.

"We can grant further moratoriums but they must be granted in return for trade advantages and trade advantages can only be accomplished by lowering tariff walls all over the world.

"The President recently vetoed the tariff bill which presented the only method possible of lowering tariff walls throughout the world. * * *

"Another constructive proposition which the President might propose but will not propose, is an amendment to the Constitution which would permit a shorter work week, and a shorter work day for industries doing an interstate business and which can regulate wages in those industries so that wages will not be reduced."

Outlaws Work With Military Precision After Cutting Wires.

Kenosha, Wis., May 14 (A.P.).—Four men, armed with submachine guns terrorized the village of Trevor, west of Kenosha, after cutting communication at 2 a. m. today. They held up the Zmrzlys Hotel, herded guests into the lobby and tossed tear gas bombs into the rooms before escaping with $400.

The robbers made an assault, almost military in its maneuvers, on the plant of the Western Live Stock Co., then they laid siege to the hotel, where they obtained the loot. In the office of the live stock company they shot at and then slugged a watchman, Frank Craney. Methodically and without any show of haste, they blew open two safes.

The robbers worked boldly and recklessly, secure in the knowledge that the community of 150 could not summon aid.

Yesterday the Wisconsin Live Stock Co. held an auction, the robbers knew that somewhere there was a large sum of money. They could not find it in the safes, so they went on to the hotel, with two captive watchmen.

Help for Polish Jews Urged by ProminentMen

New York, May 14 (A.P.).—An American committee headed by Felix M. Warburg, Rabbi Jonah B. Wise and others today called upon the American people for aid to Jewish citizens of Poland, whose want was described as "so acute as to be seemingly hopeless."

Abraham Grafman, Warsaw editor, in the committee's letter of appeal, said Jews in Poland had been aided somewhat by funds raised in 25 cities in the United States and Canada under leadership of Rabbi Wise, but campaigns were to be carried on in other cities. The joint distribution committee sought $2,500,000 for Poland and other central and eastern European countries.

GARNER ATTACKS HOOVER'S TACTICS

been opened in Chicago, the convention city, although the Speaker never has said he would be a candidate.

"The President says, and keeps saying, that confidence is frozen," Garner continued. "Something brought that about. He started issuing statements in 1929 to thaw things out.

"His statements have been so contrary—he has changed his mind so many times that in my opinion the people not only have lost confidence in his judgment but possibly his patriotism, except from a selfish standpoint.

"He has done more in the last six months to freeze public confidence than all other forces put together. If he would just take Cal's attitude for 30 days and keep mum, things would thaw out."

Garner said the President could not forget the days when he was a "mining promoter selling stocks."

"He has the idea of propaganda so strongly in his mind that he can't let even the Department of Justice, which has the case in charge, give out a statement that it is going to help without signing it himself," he added.

He was referring to the President's announcement yesterday that Justice Department and Government agents would keep after the Lindbergh baby kidnapers until they were caught. Recalling that Mr. Hoover also said yesterday that if it were necessary he would use war-time methods to combat the depression, Garner remarked:

"He not only issues daily statements, but shoots both barrels in one day. All I've got to do to be convinced that there is a lack of confidence is pick up this morning's [illegible] the President says so."

DEMOCRAT GUEST

MRS. JAMES L. SCOTT, of Raleigh, N. C., who is spending a few days in Washington, is the executive secretary of the Young Democratic Clubs of America. She is also the daughter of the founder of the North Carolina College for Women, Dr. Charles D. McIver, and is a member of the Greensboro Junior League and organizer and president of the Young Democratic Club of Greensboro in 1928.

HAMPTON TO STAGE GRAND HORSE SHOW

Leading Turfmen in Nearby States Send Entries for Exhibit.

Hampton, Va., May 14 (A.P.).—Virginia's aristocrats of the horse show ring will be gathered on the lower peninsula this week for the fourth edition of the Hampton Horse Show for which a great gathering of turfmen already is indicated.

With them will come social leaders to view their exhibitions at Armstrong's Point Friday and Saturday.

As workmen began putting final touches to the new field which will be the permanent home of the local Horse Show Association, exhibitors in Virginia and the neighboring States of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York and Delaware prepared to send their outstanding horses to Hampton.

The first van load of horses from the Warrenton and Orange country is due Wednesday. Exhibitors will arrive early to become familiar with the new field in preparation for facing stiff competition in the 33 classes arranged for the entrants this year.

Scurry Class Is Feature.

A feature of the show will be the introduction of a new class, which, as far as local officials know, has never appeared before on the Virginia horse show circuit. They have arranged a scurry class, in which time will be the principal factor. Horses will be clocked from the time they enter the ring until they leave the circle. This class was used for the first time this year in the New York show.

Although the time limit for entering the show expired Friday at midnight, Secretary John Vaughan today was receiving applications mailed just before the deadline. As a consequence, the official list will not be ready for a day or so. The final check-up is expected to reveal a larger number of entrants than last year, which outranked previous shows.

Outstanding Virginia Horses.

Outstanding Virginia horses that have been entered include: Sensatin, Princess Royal, Peter the Great, Duchess Adair, Lady Bulgaria and Icicle.

The show this year will be staged at Armstrong's Point on the Hampton-Newport News highway. The field will be located a half-mile from the highway in a natural setting that is among the most suited on the peninsula. One side is flanked by a large grove of trees and on the other will be the broad expanse of Hampton Roads. A wooden fence will inclose the field, and field boxes and bleachers will be erected facing Hampton Roads.

Bright riding habits, uniforms of the United States Army and the smart outfits of society from many sections will add a dash of color to the event. Preparations have been made to accomodate a large number of motor cars at the field.

Robber Lashed in Starting Term.

Wilmington, Del., May 14 (A.P.).—Lee Coward, 26-year-old Negro convicted of robbery, was given 40 lashes in the Newcastle County Jail today.

GAS FIRM'S MILKING CHARGED BY CAPPER

Senator Traces "Dizzy Financing" by Out-of-Town Holding Interests.

corporation, known as the Washington and Suburban Companies," he said.

"The trustees of the new corporation are employes in the Boston office of the Chase, Harris, Forbes Corporation, which controls the Central Public Service Corporation.

"The situation now is that 84 per cent of the gas company's stock is pledged to secure payment of $6,500,000 worth of bonds of the Washington Suburban Companies. These bonds are bing used to pay off a debt of the Washington and Suburban Companies to the Southern Cities Public Service Co. The Southern Cities Co. is transferring these bonds to the Chase, Harris, Forbes Corporation, which is marketing them.

"This is dizzy financing.

"The tracing of these weird financial transactions through the hands of dummy trustees and interlocking companies is some of the finest detective work ever done by the Public Utilities Commission."

He said the Central Public Service Corporation and the Chase, Harris, Forbes Corporation had people put on the pay roll of the local company and charged as high as $100 a day for their services.

"The despoiling of the gas company has been checked by the vigilance of the Public Utilities Commission," he added. "But even worse than these practices I have outlined is the sale of stock in these holding companies, supported by their ownership of utility properties which they are rapidly destroying by their greed.

Attacks Merger Plan.

"It may be clear now why some of us on Capitol Hill insist that any local utility controlled by any foreign corporation, such as the North American Co., shall be rigidly safeguarded."

Turning to the proposed street car merger, Senator Capper declared that action of the Senate District committee in voting to substitute the House merger bill for the Senate measure to expedite passage "is to be regretted."

"Not that I oppose a merger of local car lines," he added. "A merger should benefit the public and the companies alike. But the merger approved in the House resolution approved by the committee offers the public practically nothing. On the other hand, it is unreasonably favorable to the companies."

He said the fight he and Senator John J. Blaine are making for amendment of the merger resolution is supported by the public, as evidenced by recent action of the Federation of Citizens Associations.

Charges Powerful Lobby.

"Let me emphasize here that I am not attacking the merger," he said. "But I do condemn the effort that is being made to win the sanction of Congress for a plan that gives the public a possible $60,000 a year savings in free street car transfers, and hands over to the companies close to $1,000,000 a year.

"A powerful lobby has been at work on this resolution. The main object of this lobby has been to get the resolution through Congress with as few amendments on the public's side as possible."

He said one reason he refuses to abandon his stand "is the danger to the public and to local utilities from the control of interests that are foreign to the District of Columbia."

"Before we turn over our local transportation system to the control of a foreign holding corporation, I think it is wise to throw around that transportation system as many safeguards as possible—not only for the public but for the companies themselves," he added.

Police Kill 2 in Raid On Nude Cult's Rites

Bucharest, Roumania, May 14 (A. P.).—Two members of a mystic sect called "the Innocents" were killed last night near Petrunia, Bessarafia, by police who raided a secret ceremony in a cavern which apparently has been used for many years as a temple.

In the eerie light of torches 100 nude celebrants gave battle to the gendarmes, whom they greatly outnumbered. They were winning when the police resorted to their pistols. Two of the innocents were fatally wounded and twenty others were arrested. The rest fled.

UTILITIES GAS SUIT LIKELY THIS WEEK

Commission to Act Under Antimerger Law Against Capital Firm.

The Public Utilities Commission this week probably will file suit against the controlling interests of the Washington Gas Light Co. under the La Follette antimerger law as originally intended as the result of the apparent defiance of its order issued just a week ago yesterday.

While William A. Roberts, special counsel, and members of the commission were continuing their investigation yesterday into the meeting of the gas company's directors on Thursday, at which time the resignation of George A. G. Wood, as president, was accepted, it was intimated that the resort to the courts will be taken this week unless the directors appeal from the order first.

The commission was obviously balked momentarily by the action of the directors, as it had been expected that order issued a week ago would throw the burden of proof on the gas company. While the utilities body is amply supplied with evidence that the Chase, Harris, Forbes Corporation owns 84 per cent of the shares of the Washington Gas Light Co., its task would have been simpler had the controlling interests taken the first step into court.

A meeting of the stockholders of the gas company is scheduled for Wednesday, as the gathering last Monday was adjourned by Mr. Wood because of the absence of a quorum, in view of the commission's order. The utilities body is investigating reports, however, that the minutes of this session were changed so as to contain no reference to the order.

Meanwhile the gas company is operating without a president. George B. Fraser, vice president, is the nominal executive head.

Josephine K. Rum Dispute Is Settled

Liverpool Owners Agree to Cargo's Forfeiture; Bond Reduced.

(Associated Press.)

A settlement has been made between the United States and the owners of the Josephine K., Canadian rum runner whose skipper was fatally wounded as the vessel was captured near New York harbor in January, 1931.

Negotiations by the Departments of State, Justice and the Treasury with the Canadian owners, it was learned yesterday, resulted in the settlement by a contest decree, entered recently in the Southern New York District Court. The Canadian government entered a protest against the shooting of the captain, William P. Cluett. What attitude will be taken in view of the settlement has not been disclosed.

Under the settlement the owners, the Liverpool Shipping Co. of Nova Scotia, agreed to forfeiture of the liquor—between 200 and 300 bags on the vessel and more than 1,000 bags which had been unloaded to a New York garbage scow—and the United States agreed to take $500 against $10,000 bond, under which the vessel was released.

Ship and cargo were seized about 4½ miles southwest of Ambrose Lightship, near the New York harbor. The Coast Guard spied it unloading liquor to the garbage scow, pursued and captured it.

Ohio Farmer Indicted As Murderer of Wife

Millersburg, Ohio, May 14 (A.P.).—A first degree murder indictment was returned today against Herbert Meeker, 23, Wayne County farmer, in connection with the slaying of his young wife, Gertrude, several days ago.

Mrs. Meeker's nude body was found in a creek near here several days ago. Meeker later confessed he was present when she was slain by blows on the head, allegedly inflicted by a distant relative, Harold Young, 19. When officers went to arrest Young he committed suicide with a shotgun.

Tennessean Crushed by Auto.

Micaville, N. C., May 14 (A.P.).—Charles Whitson, 39, merchant, of Erwinn, Tenn., was found dead beside his wrecked automobile at Green Mountain, 12 miles from here, early today. Whitson's head and chest were crushed. Apparently he had been thrown from his car as it was wrecked and the car rolled over him.

HORSE SHOW LAUREL TO EASTER SUNDAY

McConihe's Mount Wins Two Firsts and Two Seconds at Bradley Farms.

After having thrown her rider and failed to take a jump in Friday's events, Easter Sunday, owned by F. Moran McConihe, of 2427 Kalorama road northwest, came back yesterday and won two firsts and two seconds in the National Capital Horse Show, being held at Bradley Farms.

By virtue of her remarkable performance, the 5-year-old chestnut mare definitely established herself as the outstanding horse of the show to date, with little chance for any other entry to surpass the record.

Easter Sunday won the classy event open to officers' charges, one of the outstanding tests of the show. Only horses belonging to commissioned officers or reserve officers may compete, and the riders must be dressed in uniform.

Second in this colorful ride was taken by Salida Sands, a 7-year-old gray mare exhibited by the Fort Myer Horse Show Team.

Texan in Third Place.

The Texan, owned by Brig. Gen. H. C. Whitehead, placed third, and Zephyr King, exhibited by F. Gilbreath, fourth.

The McConihe mare, Easter Sunday, also won the handicap jump, and placed second in the special class for hunters.

The National Capital trophy for model hunters was won by Gray Knight, exhibited by Mrs. John Hay Whitney. Rathfarnham, owned by William Stevenson, was a close second in this event. Thundercrash, owned by Mrs. Simon T. Patterson, was third and Precaution from the Foxcatcher Farms, fourth.

Virginia Rogers, of 1621 New Hampshire avenue, was thrown from Kaybelt and dragged some distance while practicing on the jumps. She suffered cuts and bruises, but her injuries were not serious.

Mrs. Edward Everett Gann, was among the group of notables who saw the McConihe horse win the Patton trophe in the officers' mount event.

Twenty Events Run Off.

Twenty events were run off yesterday. However, a good part of the program of the four-day meet remains uncompleted as a result of two days of rain at the opening of show. Bill to Bar Alien Reds Loses Early Vote Chance

(Associated Press.)

Representative Dies, of Texas, was so anxious to make his alien Communist exclusion bill a good one that he killed its chances of getting passed very soon.

After having the bill approved by the House immigration committee and reported to the House, he pulled it back to write "more teeth" into it. Now it has to go back to the committee for approval of language defining every conceivable kind of Communist who should be kept out or shipped out of the country.

W. & M. DISCIPLINES 40 MALE STUDENTS

Three, Suspended in Recent Hazing and Strike, Are Ordered to Leave.

Williamsburg, Va., May 14 (A.P.).—approximately 40 men students of the College of William and Mary drew a disciplinary penalty, in addition to three of the four freshmen whose suspension for alleged hazing caused a strike of the male student body April 28, Dr. J. A. C. Chandler, president of the college, announced today.

The 40 men will lose many social privileges until the ban is lifted.

The president's decision followed a second trial of the case which precopitated the student strike. The second investigation lasted nearly two weeks, in the course of which every man student was questioned as to his part in the rush on the college dining hall by students who sought to haze an unpopular waiter.

Leo Stiglitz, of Long Island, N. Y.; Richard Herrick, Montclair, N. J., and Seymour Morris, New York, were suspended until May 23, when they may return to college. They were ordered to leave the campus, and left for their homes this afternoon.

The suspension of James Bragan, of Boston, fourth of the quartet, was lifted, and he returned to classes today under probation.

The 40 men involved, who were placed under strict probation, signed a pledge not to leave the campus except during permitted hours, and to seek permission to leave only when necessary.

The second trial for the four suspended students was granted by college authorities after a two-day strike by the men students. The temper of the student body today following President Chandler's decision apparently was to regard the entire matter as closed.

Plans Being Made For Honor to Davis

Meeting Set by Group in Charge of Testimonial to Takoma Park Mayor.

A meeting of the committee in charge of securing and presenting a silver loving cup to Mayor Ben G. Davis, who has served the town of Takoma Park as a public official since 1906, will be held Tuesday night at 8 o'clock in the Takoma Park Firehouse and Community Hall. P. Ware is chairman of the committee.

Mayor Davis was defeated in the recent bitterly contested campaign by Dr. Frederick L. Lewton, a curator of the Smithsonian Institution. His long devotion to the service of the town is to be marked at a testimonial meeting at which the loving cup will be presented.

Mayor Davis was appointed town clerk and treasurer in 1906, serving in this dual capacity for 20 years. In 1926 he was elected mayor, an office which he held for three terms, being defeated by a margin of 61 votes for reelection.

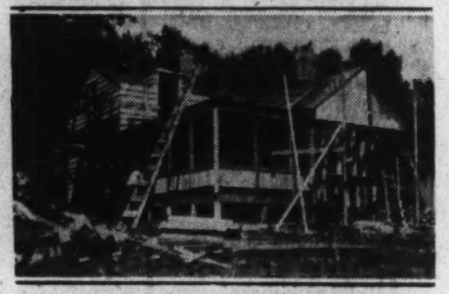
It Costs 28% Less to Modernize Your Home THIS YEAR

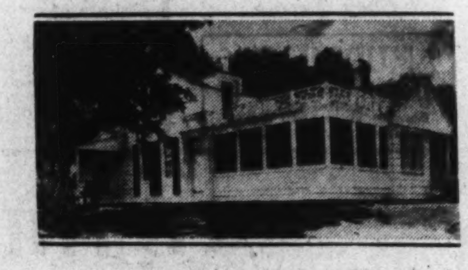
. . . And this year—NOW—you can save, on improving your home, nearly one-third of the total cost in a year as recent as 1929. Twenty-eight per cent on the price of a pair of shoes or a new hat may not mean much . . . but figure it for a permanent investment like home improvements. Savings in the purchase of any commodity are advantageous for the time being . . . but savings effected in the modernizing of a home return dividends in interest year after year . . . in fact, as long as you live in the home.

. . The ideal time to make permanent improvements is in a "buyers'" market . . . investments made at the bottom of the market have a life-long low interest charge and can be sold at a profit . . . Don't delay —jump in and take advantage of the finest bargain parade in twenty years!

In the Beginning . . . A Wreck



During the Job



In the End . . . A Home

Heating with oil The McILVAINE or "Balanced Heat" way—not only removes dirt and eliminates labor, but reduces your fuel cost to the point where you can not afford to use any other method of heating.

A new boiler or heater is not necessary to secure this fuel saving.

Whether you burn COAL, GAS or OIL—let us explain how The McILVAINE reduces your fuel bill and gives you constant, even heat—no cold 70 degrees.

Where McILVAINE burners have replaced other types of burners, COAL, GAS or OIL, the fuel bill has been greatly reduced—in some instances cut in HALF. The reason is simply that owing to its constant, continuous, automatically controlled flame, the heat is put into your home—not up the chimney.

It is a fact that 50 cents worth of oil, with the McILVAINE, gives the heating equivalent of 71 cents worth of coal, and a dollar's worth of gas. Different conditions may alter these figures slightly, but they are substantially correct.

Call or phone for our Booklet, "Balanced Heat." Let us show you some McILVAINES in operation and let you talk with owners and see for yourself the reason that you should own a McILVAINE.

History Is Planned By Negro Baptists

Clergy Group Appointed to Assist Compiler of Full Record.

Authorization for the writing of a Negro Baptist history was made at a meeting of the executive board of the National Baptist Convention of America, held in Chicago last week, according to announcement by Dr. S. S. Jones, historian. A committee of three 50-year pastors and preachers was appointed to work with the historian in compilation of this data.

The work will be in charge of Dr. Jones, with whom will be associated the Rev. E. R. Carter, pastor of the Friendship Baptist Church, of Atlanta; the Rev. C. H. Clark, of Chicago; the Rev. J. P. Robinson, of Little Rock, Ark., and Dr. John H. Frank, of Louisville, Ky., pastor of a colored Baptist church more than a century old, which has had but three pastors during that period.

The history will aim to preserve the identity of the denomination, correlate the facts of its religious persuasion, and hand them down to posterity in a form which may serve as a textbook in theological seminaries and public schools. The history is expected to be ready for press directly following the sessions of the national convention in Houston, Tex., next September.

Bishop Charles Fiske To Preach Here Today

One of the most eloquent preachers in the Protestant Episcopal Church, the Right Rev. Charles Fiske, Bishop of Central New York, will be preacher at the 11 a. m. celebration of the Holy Communion today in the choir and sanctuary of Washington Cathedral. At the service an offering will be taken up in response to the Whitsunday appeal of the Episcopal Church's presiding bishop and national council to meet the deficit for this year in domestic and foreign missionary work.

At the people's evensong at 4 p. m., which will also be held in the choir, the Right Rev. James Freeman, Bishop of Washington, will preach and in the congregation will be the member of the Episcopal Young People's Society of the Diocese. The members of the Young People's Society will make a pilgrimage through the Cathedral at 3 p. m., preceding the service under the guidance of Canon John W. Gummere, assembling at that time at the South Transept entrance.

They are seeking the derelict trading ship Baychimo, deserted by its crew in the Arctic Ocean last November, to recover any valuable furs that may have been left aboard.

Chimpanzee's Mind Proves Superior to Child's in Test

Scientist Rears Baby and Simian Under Identical Conditions and Discovers That Human Intelligence Is Often Outclassed by Animal's.

Bloomington, Ind., May 14 (U.P.).—A fascinating experiment, in which a scientist reared his child and a chimpanzee under identical conditions and found that the simian surpassed the youngster in memory, cooperative spirit and ability to grasp knowledge, was described today before the Midwestern Psychological Association.

Dr. W. N. Kellogg, Indiana University psychologist, and his wife conducted the experiment at their home in Orange Park, Fla.

Through the experiment, Dr. Kellogg sought scientific support of the theory that environment is so important in life that a chimpanzee, if reared in domestic surroundings, will act much as a human being. Its results, Dr. Kellogg said, tended to substantiate the theory.

The chimpanzee and the baby lived under identical conditions. They played together. They ate together. Their clothes were the same. As a result, Dr. Kellogg reported, the chimpanzee behaved in almost all respects like his own child.

Dr. Kellogg noted that because of the animal's shorter life it matures earlier. Hence it progressed more rapidly than the baby.

To test their learning ability, Dr. Kellogg tied slip knots on their wrists and feet. Then he timed them to see which would untie the knots quicker. The chimpanzee won.

The chimpanzee also learned the use of the hoe and rake quicker than the baby, Dr. Kellogg said.

To test their respective memories, Dr. Kellogg arranged two doors in full view of each. He then disappeared through one door, and watched to see which could longest remember through which door he went.

The chimpanzee, Dr. Kellogg found, could remember for 30 minutes. The baby could remember for only five minutes.

The chimpanzee showed superior cooperation, the psychologist said, by responding more quickly when called and by doing small tasks more readily than the child.

Dr. Kellogg was unable to teach the chimpanzee to speak and doubted whether this ever would be accomplished. This finding is contrary to that of several other scientists who have reported that they succeeded in teaching chimpanzees to say a few words.

The experiment, Dr. Kellogg believes, established the fact that much of an infant human's early behavior is acquired, not "native or natural" reactions, as often contended.

Mrs. Brown Rites To Be Tomorrow

Was Prominent Capital Musician and D. A. R. Member.

Funeral services for Mrs. Grace Dufour Brown, who died Friday in Garfield Memorial Hospital after an extended illness, will be held at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon at the Speare's funeral home, 1623 Connecticut avenue. Interment will be in Rock Creek Cemetery.

Mrs. Brown was born in this city 70 years ago and was a lifelong resident here. She was for many years a teacher of piano and organ and was an organist at several churches. She studied with Dr. Anton Gloetzner and as a young woman became the organist of the Temple Baptist Church, later becoming director of the choir as well. She played and directed at this church for 33 years. She was also engaged in the choir work and as organist at the Wesley M. E. Church. Mrs. Brown was a member of the Epiphany Church and the D. A. R.

She is survived by a son, Oliver Dufour Brown, and a brother, Dr. Clarence Dufour, of this city.

PARIS TO COOPERATE WITH U. S. LIBERALS

Herriot Says Britain Must Also Agree on Equivalent Cuts in Reparations.

(Copyright, 1932, by the United Press.)

Paris, May 14 (U.P.).—The coming foreign policy of France will be based on closest cooperation with the liberals of the United States, Edouard Herriot, "man of the hour" in French politics, said in an interview today.

He said significantly that no reduction of Germany's reparations is possible unless the United States and Britain agree to equivalent reductions in war debts.

Herriot is leader of the Radical Socialist party, which will be in virtual control of the French government's foreign policy. Carried into power by the recent elections, Herriot is the likeliest choice for premier. Even if another is chosen, Herriot is certain to exercise a dominating influence on French policies for the next four years.

An important meeting of the executive council of the Radical Socialists will be held next Wednesday to formulate a program and draft a possible cabinet.

Desire Close Relations.

"The Radical Socialists, who are entering Parliament in great numbers, desire the closest and most confident relations with the liberals of the United States," he said.

"In accordance with our principles we will abstain conscientiously from meddling with questions which concern the United States alone and refrain from expressing opinions thereon.

"As soon as the exact situation in France is known, we will express ourselves with complete frankness to our friends across the ocean as well as to others. We will try to respond with scrupulous exactitude in every case, with perfect good faith, to any questions submitted.

"By loyal and sincere discussion in the inspired name of liberty, we hope to put an end to the difficulties which beset us. We desire justice for all peoples. Of this justice, we demand for France only its equitable share.

Foreign Program Defined.

"Our foreign program is clearly defined. We are anxious to avoid extremes of provocative nationalism and blind internationalism.

"We see disarmament as a problem of international security. We see limitation or reduction of armaments only under control of the League of Nations and progressively in proportion to the development of international security.

"We urge organization of an international force, internationalization of aviation, tanks, heavy artillery and strategic railways and steamship lines capable of use for the mobilization and transport of troops.

"No reduction in Germany's reparations is possible unless the United States and Great Britain agree to equivalent reductions."

FEDERATION ASSAILS BARRING OF MARRIED COUPLES IN U.S. JOBS

Legislative Proposal Called Blow at Efficiency and Seniority System.

BUSINESS EMPLOYES' COERCION IS CHARGED

Copeland Gets Evidence One Concern Had Form Letters on Pay Cuts.

Barring husband and wife from working jointly in the Federal service, proposed in legislation now before the Senate economy committee, would be a blow at efficiency, seniority and the merit system, officials of the National Federation of Federal Employes declared last night.

President Luther C. Steward and Secretary-Treasurer Gertrude M. McNally issued a joint statement affirming the organization's opposition to "legislation which would penalize so severely and so unjustly workers who have proved themselves to be faithful and efficient servants of the people."

Meanwhile Thomas F. Flaherty, secretary-treasurer of the National Federation of Postoffice Clerks, turned over to Senator Royal S. Copeland (Democrat), New York, what he termed "evidence of the coercive methods used by certain business concerns in requiring employes to send letters to Congress urging pay reductions for Government employes."

"Violation of Merit System."

The National Federation of Federal Employes officials held it "a clear and insupportable violation of the whole merit system" to discharge either husband or wife, where both are rendering efficient service.

"The obvious injustice of the proposal is heightened by the fact that while it hits directly at married persons in the Federal service, it wholly exempts wedded couples one of whom may be in the Government service and the other employed in private business. In other words, such duality of income sources for the family would affect in no way the person employed by the Federal Government."

The statement presented figures to show the number of married couples employed in the Government in small ratio to the total. It was shown that in some bureaus the average salary was so small as to force husband and wife both to work to support the family.

Yonkers Company Accused.

"It is true that a very appealing and a very demagogic case can be made out against such persons," read the statement. "But therein lies an extreme danger. To cast aside all consideration of efficiency, of the merit system in the Federal service, of seniority, and countless other factors, is to submit again to a destructive wave of hysteria which is certain to prove most costly in the long run."

Mr. Flaherty charged an attempt to create the impression that the average wage earner is greatly aroused over his Federal tax burden.

"This is not the case at all," he said. "Most of the taxation protests received by members of Congress from individuals are the result of coercive methods of large employers.

"I am submitting to Senator Copeland copies of eleven different form letters prepared in the office of a large corporation in Yonkers employing thousands of men. Employes were given specific instruction to copy one of the form letters and not use the company's stationery in writing to their senators and representatives."

He charged "there is no genuine sentiment for Federal pay cutting among workers in private industry, although many of them have been forced to sign petitions and form letters to this effect."

Grew, New Ambassador to Japan, to Sail for Tokyo Friday.

(Associated Press.)

The Thirty-first United States Infantry probably will leave Shanghai for the Philippines about June 30, if there are no further disorders in Shanghai.

Gen. Douglas McArthur, chief of staff, suggested to the State Department that considerable saving in the transportation could be had by postponing the date until the end of June, when the War Department will have a regular transport making the trip.

Joseph C. Grew, the new Ambassador to Japan, was to leave Washington last night for San Francisco, with his family, to sail on Friday on the steamer President Coolidge for Yokohama. Mr. Grew expects to arrive in Japan on June 6.

CAPITAL ECHOES

By EDWARD T. FOLLIARD.

A Political Feud Born of Silence. Some Light on the Smith-Roosevelt Case.

It was not something that Franklin D. Roosevelt said that caused Alfred E. Smith to turn against him. On the contrary, it was his failure to say something. It was his failure to tell Smith that he wanted to be President and to ask Smith for his support.

Alfred E. Smith.

This, it is now agreed by Democrats who ought to know, was the genesis of the Roosevelt-Smith break. Of course, much has happened in the meantime. The spark which Roosevelt struck by his silence was fanned into a flame by his tactics on the prohibition question and by the unwise remarks and conduct of some of his supporters. Hurt at first, Smith became angry, then fighting mad, and as a consequence the Democratic party today is wracked by one of the most dramatic feuds in American political history.

It seems an almost incredible thing, this feud, when the past political relationship of the two New Yorkers is considered. Who could have forecasted it that day in San Francisco, back in 1920, when Roosevelt first nominated Smith for the Presidency? Who could have foreseen it four years later, when, at the Madison Square Gaarden convention, Roosevelt performed the same service? Who could have even dreamed it when, at Houston in 1928, Roosevelt, now a cripple, dragged himself to the stage and launched his friend Al into the campaign as the "Happy Warrior?"

* * * *

Bearing in mind this record of Roosevelt's devotion, and bearing in mind, too, the story of how Roosevelt, though a sick man, agreed to run for Governor of New York and, thus help Smith carry the State against Hoover—the followers of Roosevelt now behold Smith and cry out, "Ingrate!"

Gov. Roosevelt.

The Smith people, on the other hand, think that the talk about Smith's "debt" to Roosevelt is very much overdone. Did it hurt Roosevelt to nominate Smith at three conventions? they ask, and they answer with an emphatic "No!" On the contrary, they argue, it put Roosevelt in the limelight.

As for Roosevelt's "sacrifice" in running for governor at Smith's behest, this in reality, the Smith people

FIRST LADY IS GIVEN DEGREE AT WOOSTER

Typical American Wife and Mother Is Honored by Ohio College.

Wooster, Ohio, May 14 (A.P.).—Mrs. Herbert Hoover today donned a black academic robe and a gold-tasseled mortarboard to receive the honorary degree of doctor of letters of humanity.

The degree was conferred upon her by Wooster College as "a typical American wife and mother" in a ceremoney held as part of Wooster's celebration of the 125th anniversary of its origin.

Despite the solemn dress and formality of the occasion, Mrs. Hoover was as elated and pleased as a college girl. Dr. Charles F. Wishart, president of Wooster College, conferred the degree, and then Mrs. Hoover signed the official graduate roster. It was the seventh honorary degree the Nation's first lady has received.

The visit brought Mrs. Hoover to the city her great-grandfather, William Henry, helped plan 125 years ago. The first surveying of Wooster, then known as the "new purchase," was among the scenes depicted in a spectacular pageant this afternoon in which 1,000 persons participated.

Mrs. Hoover also placed a wreath on the grave of her great-grandfather and his son, William Henry, both of whom are buried here.

"Wooster always has been a topic of conversation in our family," Mrs. Hoover said prior to the ceremonies.

"I always have regarded life in a small town as one of the most satisfactory of existences. I have been greatly interested in our colleges since my own college days, and as Wooster is a college town I am doubly interested in the community. That is why I am here, and I am enjoying it immensely."

Akron Will Join Fleet In Pacific Maneuvers

Sunnyvale, Calif., May 14 (A.P.).—Moored firmly to a 70-foot mast, the Navy dirigible Akron took aboard additional helium gas and fuel today in preparation for her departure next week for sea maneuvers with the United States fleet—the purpose of her visit to the Pacific Coast.

The maneuver period originally was set to end next Wednesday, but has been extended to May 28. There is a possibility the fleet concentration—since the scouting fleet regularly assigned to Atlantic waters now is in the Pacific—may be continued until after the Olympic games in Los Angeles next August.

WAKEFIELD IS NOW NATION'S PROPERTY

Memorial Body Gives Shrine After Years of Work on Restoration.

Wakefield, Va., May 14 (A.P.).—Wakefield, the birthplace of George Washington, was given to the Nation today.

The gift was made by the Wakefield Memorial Association. It was accepted by Secretary of the Interior Wilbur in behalf of the Federal Government. In the midst of the beautiful scenery of the Pope's Creek plantation formal transfer exercises were held with Mrs. Anthony Wayne Cook, of Cooksville, Pa., formally giving the shrine into the custody of the National Government.

"It is fortunate for this country that his (Washington's) development took place in such a country as we see about us," said Secretary Wilbur accepting the presentation. "The pioneer must have strong personal qualities. The children of pioneers invariably catch something of the sternness of nature and resist it with tenacity and the inflexible determination to succeed.

"George Washington caught the spirit of self-reliance, individualism and initiative that is characteristic of the pioneer."

Mrs. Cook, first vice president of the association, told the story of the association's efforts to rescue Wakefield from its century of oblivion.

At the beginning of the work, she said, not even the foundations of the house were visible because of a heavy overgrowth. She gave credit for the work of restoration to Mrs. Josephine Wheelwright Rust, first and only president of the organization.

They were aided in the task by John D. Rockefeller, jr., and others.

Pageantry, with its participants in colonial costumes, added to the color of the ceremony.

(Associated Press.)

As the Government formally accepted yesterday the reconstructed Washington homestead at Wakefield in Virginia, Postmaster General Brown announced the establishment of a permanent postoffice there to be known officially as "Washington's Birthplace, Westmoreland County, Va."

Existence of a Wakefield postoffice in Sussex County, Va., precluded giving that name to the postoffice on the Wakefield estate. Henceforth the thousands of tourists who visit the shrine may send from the estate cards and letters bearing the "Washington Birthplace" postmark. No such facilities have existed heretofore.

Miss Julia L. Washington, who resides at Latanes, 2.7 miles away, has been appointed acting postmaster.

DAVID INGALLS ADDS RACE FOR GOVERNOR TO SOARING CAREER

Ace of Young Republicans in Ohio Has Won by Love of Flying.

HONORS COME RAPIDLY TO NAVY'S AIR VETERAN

First He Had to Overcome Handicap of Wealth and Position.

By DAVID RANKIN BARBEE.

Some four or five years ago a great crowd of the residents of Chagrin Valley near Cleveland, Ohio—a dozen persons is a "great crowd" in that exclusive social colony—were attracted by the aerial performance of a lone aviator who was making a fiery red-colored plane do the most harrowing stunts half a mile in the air.

This lone aviator was a very D'Artagnan of the ether. His daring was surpassed only by his skill, and his skill was quite equal to his nonchalance. He romped about the heavens pretty much as Mercury was wont to do when piloting a very sinful corpse to the other world. One moment he seemed to defy the laws of gravity by climbing straight in a vertical line toward the zenith of things ambient and circumambient; and the next he dropped like a plummet or a winged bird straight to the ground, recovering himself when he reached the danger line and shooting, in a graceful spiral, back whence he fell.

When he observed the group on the ground below him watching his antics, the aviator opened his bag and showed all of his tricks. As fast as thinking he cut every known dido. It was as if he turned a back flip one second and then changing his position tumbled forward in double curves with such amazing rapidity that the spectators were electrified.

How He Feels About Flying.

"Who on earth can that be?" asked one of the newcomers from Boston who had but recently married into one of the first families residing in that exclusive colony.

"That, my dear, is Albert Ingalls' son commuting from Cleveland," replied a grand dame. "He's entertaining his young daughters; and I believe he is taking his 'daily dozen.'"

It was, in truth, the son of the noted New York Central executive, who by now has earned a name for himself, and no longer is known as the son of his father. He is and has been since March 16, 1929, the Assistant Secretary of the Navy in charge of aviation. Next November he may change jobs, and become the Governor of Ohio. He is flying high in that direction now, not stunting but just straight flying, and having but recently won the Republican nomination, he is tuning up his planes—for he has a stable full of them—preparatory to flying away with that trophy.

When he came on to Washington, some three years ago, to take his present job, he exclaimed to a bevy of blushing young correspondents: "I am crazy about flying!" That's what his boyhood friends said about him, only they phrased it: "Dave Ingalls is a nut on aviation." One of them—perhaps it was a Harvard chum—was more correct in his speech, for he, broadly accenting his words, said: "David, I fear me, alas, loves the air."

Overcomes Riches' Handicap.

There is something more to the man than that. He is not simply a "nut on aviation," or a shark on flying, or an enthusiast on traveling in the air. He is just turned 33, and is perhaps, the most-talked-of young man in Ohio today. I dare say that in all of her long and turbulent political history no young man of his age and of his background has won such a place for himself in politics as is now his.

To begin with, the odds are always against the son of a very rich man when he enters politics. It took the late Nicholas Longworth, who had many of the earmarks of real greatness, a long time to live down his family's wealth and social position and rise on the merits packed away in his own mind and character. Common folks in this America of ours are not afflicted with the worship of mere wealth.

Young Mr. Ingalls, of course, has had a rapid rise, and that is due to the stuff in him. He has lived down

About 2,000 business executives are expected to attend. The program includes thorough examination of Government expenditures, Federal, State and local.

HOOVER PUSHES KEY TO OPEN CENTENNIAL MORSE CELEBRATION

Granddaughter of Inventor Describes Struggle to Perfect System.

CEREMONY BROADCAST TO NATION OVER RADIO

President Lauds Work of Erstwhile Painter; First Words Repeated.

(Associated Press.)

The fastest of modern telegraph machines yesterday flashed a special message from President Hoover, commemorating the conception by Samuel F. B. Morse 100 years ago of his laborious ticking original instrument.

In pressing a gold-studded wire key near his office, the President opened officially a world-wide centennial telebration of the creation of the Morse code and the means of transmitting its dots and dashes.

All the speed of present day communication was brought into contrast with the slow methods of old at the initiation of yesterday's ceremonies.

Exactly at 1:02 p. m., Eastern standard time, Mr. Hoover in the White House placed his finger upon the gold telegraph key, itself a chapter in communications history. His touch started a modern machine, flashing words in praise of Morse to the Capitol Building a mile away.

There, in the United States Supreme Court rooms from which the inventor, with infinite pains, ticked out his first public message in 1844, the same message was repeated.

Broadcast Over Country.

While a telegrapher ticked it out again—'What hath God wrought?'—a modern microphone picked up the dots and dashes and broadcast them instantaneously to listeners in the far corners of the country.

Simultaneously, newspaper organizations, keyed to the flashing of important news, almost instantaneously in all directions, were transmitting millions of words almost at the speed of speech over vast wire systems.

Miss Leila Livingstone Morse, granddaughter of the inventor, played her part in the ceremonies. She described the sending of that first message, made possible by a $30,000 grant from Congress to set up the first telegraph line extending from the Capitol to Baltimore, Md.

The President's message follows in full:

"I am glad to open this world-wide centennial celebration of the invention of the Morse telegraphic code and of the electrical transmission of these signals.

Conceived by American.

"It is a source of pride to all Americans that the vast system of instantaneous communications by means of the electrical telegraph originated in the mind of an American, Samuel F. B. Morse, whose culture was an honor to his country and whose character was an inspiration to mankind."

In starting this message, the Chief Executive touched a telegraph key that has figured in the lives of four other Presidents, Taft, Wilson, Harding and Coolidge. Owned by Edward W. Smithers, White House communications chief, it is brought forth on every occasion when a Chief Executive is required to open a celebration at some distant point.

President Wilson used it to set off the final blast in the Panama Canal that actually joined the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific.

During the day, not only in the United States, but also abroad, the story of Morse's invention was retold—how he, a successful artist, conceived the plan while crossing the Atlantic on a sailing ship in 1832, and then labored for twelve years against hardships and near starvation before flashing out publicly his striking first message.

MORSE SCION ON HISTORIC SPOT

Underwood & Underwood.

Miss Leila Livingston Morse, granddaughter of Prof. Samuel F. B. Morse, inventor of the electric telegraph, yesterday stood on the same spot at the Capitol from which the first wire message was sent 100 years ago to take part in a world-wide radio broadcast celebrating the centennial. With her is Dr. Charles G. Abbot, secretary of the Smithsonian Institution.

MEMELLANDERS HIT LITHUANIA AS RULER

Records Antipathy to "Foster Mother" by Electing 24 Germans to Diet.

(Associated Press.)

Turbulent Memelland again has recorded its antipathy for Lithuania in its recent election. Twenty-four German members of the new Diet were elected by the German parties, with Lithuanians placing but five.

This former German territory, a little larger than Rhode Island, and with a population of about 145,000, which the League of Nations entrusted to Lithuania, threatens to continue its war against what it regards as an unkind foster mother. Lithuanians were charged by the German elements with having colonized Lithuanians in Memelland to gain control of the Diet.

Just as Danzig and Upper Silesia are opposing Polish control, this Germanic group, centering about the old Hanseatic port of Memel, is trying to upset the map-making of the Versailles treaty and of the League of Nations.

Memel, chief city of Memelland, lying on the Baltic at the mouth of the Nieman, is the only port of Lithuania. The Nieman is an important outlet for the timber and agricultural products of Lithuania, which has more than 2,000,000 inhabitants.

Before the World War, Memel and a strip of land east of the Nieman belonged to Germany, while the Hinterland was Russian. The Versailles treaty turned the strip east of the river over to the allies and suggested that Memel be made a free city, like Danzig.

This arrangement was unacceptable to the Memellanders and Lithuanians, who overthrew the authority of the French troops occupying the territory in 1923.

The League of Nations then named a commission of inquiry, and in 1924 the Memel territory was constituted a unit under Lithuanian sovereignty, with limited administrative and financial autonomy but with a governor appointed by the President of Lithuania.

Norman H. Davis, former American Assistant Secretary of State, who is now at Geneva with the American delegation at the disarmament conference, was chairman of a League of Nations commission which went to Memel to investigate and conciliate the territory.

The new arrangement never worked satisfactorily. There was constant friction, and the trouble came to a head last February, when the Lithu-

BOTH PARTIES FACE FARMERS' GRILLING

Political Leaders Pondering Problem as Convention Time Approaches.

(Associated Press.)

The approach of the national political conventions keeps reminding Republican and Democratic leaders that some time soon they must find an answer to this question:

"What can we tell the farmers when we begin writing our party platforms?"

With prices low, debts and taxes high, surplus crops and scarce markets, and credit hard to get, political leaders confess their task is a difficult one, and anybody with practical ideas will get a respectful hearing at party headquarters. They are mindful that one-third of America's 122,000,000 people live on farms.

The Republican party, under whose administration the Farm Board was created, naturally will be on the defensive. Secretary Hyde, of the Agriculture Department, will be an active campaigner, however, and attempt to turn the battle into a strong offensive in the Midwestern farm belt.

Secretary Hyde, close to President Hoover, has little sympathy for the export debenture or equalization fee plans of farm relief, and is a supporter of high tariffs. He firmly believes in cooperative marketing—fostered by the Farm Board—and asserts the board's stabilization operations saved the country millions of dollars.

Those who have talked with President Hoover say he has not presented any changed ideas on farm relief. But his mind is open, they say, for suggestions as to how the farmer may be helped.

Only one of the Democratic contenders for the presidential nomination—Gov. Roosevelt—has spoken of

Borah's Wife Invites Hoover to Go Hunting

(Associated Press.)

Mrs. William E. Borah, wife of the senator from Idaho, yesterday invited President Hoover to go hunting in Indaho next fall. One member of Mrs. Borah's party said the Chef Executive had replied, smiling, "If the (economic) war is over by then I will go anywhere."

Mrs. Borah said they had had a "pleasant chat" with Mr. Hoover after presenting their invitation. She introduced her niece, Miss Mary Luedemann, of Portland, Oreg.; Harry C. Shellworth, and James F. Ailshie, jr., both of Boise, Idaho.

1932 CONVENTIONS AT CHICAGO TO BE MOST ELABORATE

Stadium Decoration Work Is Under Way With Many New Features.

DELEGATES TO BE KEPT "COOL" BY AIR SYSTEM

Hundreds of Newspapermen and Photographers Will "Cover" Nominations.

Chicago, May 14 (A.P.).—In a cool spacious hall, a riot of color, the next President of the United States will be nominated.

Chicago, host to both national conventions in the same building this year, expects to provide the two parties the most beautiful and most comfortable conventions in history. With new hotels eliminating the old problem of housing the delegates, both the city and party leaders are concentrating their efforts on the Chicago Stadium.

When the Republican convention starts June 14, to be followed by the Democratic meeting June 27, this great structure will be dressed up and equipped in a fitting manner for the important part it will play in the Nation's history.

A study of the plans now nearing completion gives one a picture of the building as it will look when the big show starts in June. It is a mass of color with flags overhead, the national colors draped on every railing and the summer garb of 20,000 persons adding animation and variety to the scene.

Speaker's Stand.

On one side is a large stage or platform and extended from this toward the center of the arena is a "tongue" commanding the attention of every section of the auditorium. Here the speaker faces the delegates and alternates and is flanked by rows of newspapermen.

Huge portraits of famous national figures look down from either end of the hall. Under one sits the official convention band; under the other, a man who plays what the stadium management proudly calls the "largest pipe organ in the world."

The delegates, as we see them now, all have their coats on and the familiar phrase "the sweltering crowds" is obsolete.

The stadium has a refrigerating system similar to those used in the large movie theaters and it is "always 70 degrees cool."

With the two parties sharing the expense, the decorations will undoubtedly be the most elaborate ever attempted. Ralph Williams, vice chairman of the Republican national committee, is considering, among others, a novel scheme submitted by W. J. Glendon, of the Chicago Flag & Decorating Co.

Under this plan the ceiling of the hall would be covered with one huge American flag 200 by 300 feet. This flag would completely cover a 20-story building and would be longer than the National Capitol is high.

Decoration Plans.

Glendon's plan calls for more than 15,000 square feet of material including 1,000 flags. The presidential shield and the shields of the various States would be worked into the decorations of the boxes balconies and railings. For the Republican convention portraits of Washington and Lincoln, each 15 by 25 feet, would be placed at the ends of the building.

Comparatively little special construction is needed. The stage to be occupied by the national committee must be built as well as a slightly raised platform for newspaper correspondents. Special wiring is required for lighting effects which will permit all types of photography and for the loud speaker system.

"Light!" Three thousand watts flood the Chicago Stadium. "Camera!" Dozens of photographers begin "shooting." Bang! The gavel sounds, and the convention is under way, well recorded by a barrage of cameras for the people at home.

This is the picture of the opening of a national convention of 1932. Lighting of the convention hall to permit all types of photography has been one of the big problems confronting party leaders who have the responsibility of staging the big shows. Ralph Williams announced he had let the contract to Robert J. Dugan, Chicago lighting engineer.

Lighting Arrangements.

Dugan's plans call for approximately a billion candlepower in addition to the regular lights at the Stadium. Searchlight beams from two corners of the Stadium will light up the huge structure until it is almost as bright as day.

The lights may be focused on any point in the hall or they may be

Oxford-Field Party Finds Tablet on Gilgamesh Epic

Fifty More Lines of Story of Hiawatha of Babylon Revealed in Discovery at Kish; May Supply Missing Parts of Narrative.

Oxford, England, May 14 (A.P.).—Fifty more lines of the famous epic of Gilgamesh—the Hiawatha of Babylon—have been found inscribed on part of a stone tablet by the Oxford-Field Museum expedition to Kish, the ancient city in the middle of the deserts of Irak.

This epic, probably the oldest adventure story in the world, tells of the wondrous adventures of the young god Gilgamesh—his battles with fearsome monsters, how he crossed the waters of death and how he found and lost again the weed which makes the old grow young.

A stirring account is given also, of the great Babylonian flood of which unmistakable evidence is said to have been found during the expedition's work at Kish.

Dr. Stephen Langdon, professor of Assyriology in the University of Oxford and director of the expedition, says the tablet was apparently part of a very old edition of this epic and that it is of great interest because it may clear up some of the mysterious adventures of Gilgamesh which are only half told in the later editions, due to parts of the tablets being lost.

"Most of our knowledge of this epic," he says, "was gained from a set of tablets once in the possession of a king of Assyria who lived about 650 B. C.

"There were originally twelve tablets in this edition and parts of each of them have been found. Some, however, are very fragmentary.

"The story itself, of course, is very much older than that, and the tablet now found at Kish may have been written about 4,000 years ago. Even then, it probably was begun by collecting together myths and traditional stories from an even more remote past.

"The new tablet, which is inscribed in cuneiform characters, has not yet arrived in England, but so far as I can decipher photographs, it seems to deal with that part of the epic where Gilgamesh fights and kills the

$500,000 Quickly Voted In Senate to Save Record

Congressional zeal for economy, that checked Senate action on all appropriation bills, almost cut short the life of the Congressional Record yesterday. This was hitting a little close home, even for economy-minded senators. A special appropriation of $500,000 saved the day.

"I regret to state that unless measures are taken at once to relieve the imperative need, I will be compelled to discontinue all Congress printing, including the record, and this not later than Monday, May 16," Public Printer George H. Carter wrote Appropriations Chairman Wesley L. Jones.

"This," he added "would mean our entire congressional force would have to be laid off, as departmental printing is insufficient to keep them employed."

Senator Jones, who postponed appropriations while his economy committee studied how to save $300,000,000 and balance the budget, lost no time informing the Senate of the new savings crisis. The appropriation, he explained, is carried in the legislative supply measure.

"That bill, as we know, is now before the committee and we are considering very carefully the legislative part of it," he said. "The bill will not pass for some little time yet. It is extremely important that this $500,000 should be made available."

It was, and with no opposition.

German Leader's Criticism Of U. S. Music Causes Stir

Description of American Symphony Orchestras as "Pet Puppies" by Furtwaengler, Berlin Philharmonic Conductor, Draws Fire on Many Sides.

Berlin, May 14 (A.P.).—By likening American symphony orchestras to "pet puppies which one keeps without any real necessity" Wilhelm Furtwaengler, conductor of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, has created a stir in the musical, diplomatic and social set of the German capital, and has drawn protests both from members of the American colony and from musical critics.

The American Embassy even took notice of the incident, calling the attention of the foreign office in unofficial friendly manner to the impropriety of Furtwaengler's slighting remarks.

The occasion was the fifteenth anniversary celebration of the Philharmonic Orchestra. Furtwaengler, who, for the past ten years has been conductor of the famous aggregation, besides having acted as guest conductor with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, the Bayreuth Festival plays, the Vienna Opera, and the Leipzig Gewandhaus Orchestra, was the last speaker.

He addressed an audience comprising federal, state and city officials, members of the diplomatic corps, a representative of President Von Hindenburg, the capital's musical critics, Prof. Albert Einstein and other leaders of Berlin's cultural and social life.

How Furtwaengler's remarks struck even some of his German hearers is best illustrated by the report of the musical critic of the Berlin Morgenpost, who wrote:

"Furtwaengler, heartily cheered, took the floor for the closing remarks. Not, however, to express his thanks and appropriately to end a hitherto harmonious gathering, but to praise himself and the orchestra at the expense of others in a surprisingly polemical and aggressive manner. He likened the orchestras of America and Holland to 'pet puppies,

NOTABLES TO SPEAK AT COLORED PARLEY

Capper to Address Opening Session of Conference Tuesday Night.

The National Association for Advancement of Colored People, which will hold its twenty-third annual session here this week, made public yesterday the list of principal speakers at the night mass meetings, and the special features of daily sessions.

The conference will open Tuesday night at Shiloh Baptist Church with an address by Senator Arthur Capper, on "The Negro's Political Future." Commissioner Luther Reichelderfer will welcome the gathering. Other addresses will be made by Joel Spingarn, president of the association, and Mrs. Addie W. Hunton, of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom.

Secretary Ray Lyman Wilbur, of the Department of the Interior, will address a 4 o'clock session of the conference Wednesday afternoon, and will bring a message from President Hoover. A night session will be addressed by Dr. Abram Harris, of Howard University, on "Economic Reconstruction and Negro Welfare." Senator Robert J. Bulkley, of Ohio, and Dr. W. E. B. DuBois, will discuss similar problems.

Other Speakers.

Dr. John Dewey, of Columbia University, and George S. Schuyler, Negro journalist, will speak on Thursday night. Nathan A. Margold, of New York, in charge of the association's legal campaign, will speak at 10 o'clock Friday morning, on "A Program of Legal Defense for Negroes."

The declaration of war against "jim crow" accommodations in train and bus transportation, and in hotels, will be outlined Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

The Spingarn medal will be awarded to Robert Russa Moton, principal of Tuskegee Institute, in the auditorium of the Department of Commerce Building Friday night, by Senator Bronson Cutting, of New Mexico. On this occasion also a memorial address on the late Mrs. Florence Kelley will be made by Miss Lillian D. Wald, head of the Henry Street Settlement, of New York.

Dedication of Tablet.

A pilgrimage by motor buses will be made to Harpers Ferry Saturday morning, for dedication of a bronze memorial tablet to John Brown, of Ossawatomie, the principal speakers being Dr. DuBois and Oswald Garrison Villard, his biographers. M. Dantes Bellegrade, Haitian minister, will address a sunrise meeting, at 6:30 Sunday morning, at Cedar Hill, Anacostia, the home of Frederick Douglass, preserved as a national shrine by the National Association of Colored Women.

Elaborate musical programs will precede all of the night mass meetings. The Musical Art Society, under direction of Roy W. Tibbs, will sing at the Washington Auditorium on Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock, when the principal addresses will be broadcast by Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, president of Howard University; Senator Robert M. La Follette and Walter White, secretary of the association.

House to Consider 'Hoppers at Once

Permission to Act on Relief Measure Tomorrow Is Given by Garner.

(Associated Press.)

Permission to call up the $1,000,000 grasshopper control measure in the House under suspension of the rules tomorrow was granted yesterday by Speaker Garner to members from eight Western States.

This group of more than a score spent a large portion of the day in conference on the measure, which must pass by a two-thirds vote under this procedure. Representative Buchanan (Democrat), Texas, chairman of the appropriations subcommittee which considered the measure, is slated at present to sponsor the subject on the floor. The plan would provide for cooperative poisoning of the pest, the Federal Government to purchase the poison with the $1,000,000 fund and the States to pay for its distribution.

"An early adoption of this resolution is indispensable to prevent a recurrence of the grasshopper scourge," said Representative Williamson (Republican), South Dakota. "The grasshoppers are already hatching."

spread out to take in all of the vast assemblage. Most of the time they will beat down on the speaker's rostrum with such intensity that they would probably blind the speaker if it were not for the fact they came from the side and above.

Duggan will use a new type incandescent bulb, 10,000 watts each, different from the old arc light in that it makes no noise and thus does not interfere with sound apparatus.

Pictures recording the highlights of the conventions will range all the way from the snapshots of amateurs in the audience to the elaborate talking pictures of the news reel companies.

Between 50 and 60 press association and newspaper photographers will be accommodated at vantage points in the convention hall and will be allowed to roam the floor as well. Their pictures will be relayed to the far corners of the earth by telephone wire, airplane and mail.

Four or possibly five moving picture companies will be represented, each with cameramen at several stations.

A special telephone system will be constructed to connect all light platforms with the camera stands. When a new speaker steps on the platform, a demonstration starts in the hall or anything else of importance occurs, lights will flare up and the click and whir of cameras will begin again.

great monster Khumbla, the guardian of the cedar forest wherein dwells the goddess Irnina.

"Many of the Assyrian tablets are so fragmentary that parts of the epic can not be understood clearly. Fifty new lines, in an older edition, therefore, is a great find in that they may fill in the gaps of what was one of the important literary products of Babylon.

Kiwanis Club to Honor Ancient Indian As It Observes Its Birthday This Week

Old Keewanis Was First of Increased Tribe of Glad-Handers.

How Retired Michigan Business Man Immortalized Him.

By DAVID RANKIN BARBEE.

Our ancestors, "who carved an empire out of the wilderness," said there was no good Indian but a dead one. But they didn't know Keewanis. With the exception of Pocahontas and old Pushmataha, he was the best Indian in history. His name translated into Bible English means "To Make Oneself Known." It is said of him that he was the original Robin Good-Fellow, the first of the Tribe of Glad-Handers, and the founder of the Order of Back Slappers, of which Senator Jim Watson, of Indiana, is now the big chief.

Old Keewanis lived in the upper Michigan country. That explains a lot in his character we would not otherwise understand. Every man is a product of his times and of his environment. Keewanis was no exception to this everlasting and eternal rule.

We are told that he had three strong loves: Crippled children, good food and stalwart men.

He was a humanitarian in a tribe of savages; a gourmet in a gang of gluttons, and a smiler in a coterie of long faces. If he lived in our times he would be a senator from Pennsylvania, the host of a wayside tearoom or president of the Alfalfa Club.

As Rich as Couzens.

Keewanis was indeed a very remarkable man. He had all the wealth of Senator James Couzens, all the savoir faire of Senator Arthur Vandenburg and all the pulchritude of Representative Louis C. Crampton. Because of this comparison it should not be thought that he was a Republican in politics. Far from it. He was a Democrat before Thomas Jefferson or Andy Jackson or John McDuffie was ever heard of.

Is it any wonder that this great aboriginal chief should have given his name to a dinner club—and a good dinner club at that? My question answers itself. So many-sided a man could have given names to a whole flock of dinner clubs—and programs, too—and never come further down the alphabet than the C's.

Our gregarious and lunching citizenry were a long time tumbling to the importance of old Keewanis in the economy of modern civilization; but once the idea got across, it sunk in with a bang. No American Indian had this inspiration, for it was a Detroit merchant named Joseph Prance to whom it came, back in 1915. There was a big chief of the Nez Perce tribe named Joseph, and on occasion he could prance either in the stately quadrille, in a sun dance or at a dog feast; but he was all Indian, no club man, and no merchant.

Mr. Prance is a fine old rich, and retired business man, who having made his fortune pined for the fellowship that all men at some period in their lives long for. So he called together a few of his bosom cronies and said to them: "Let us make a club that is different." And those good old Detroit business men said with one voice: "siHoka." Just like that.

Dined on Thursday.

They were seated about the dinner table and as the food disappeared and the hollow places in their ribs filled out, they conceived the idea of a dinner club that should meet on Thursday and while dining formulate plans for making this a better world in which to live. There were so many things to do and so few people to do them. Why not reduce the number of things needed to be done by providing the men to do them? Surely a very noble idea. And out of that idea came the first Kiwanis Club. As loyal Michiganders but one name for the club suggested itself: That of old Keewanis. Having selected a name and a tutelary god, it was decided to follow the historic habit of the American people and change the spelling of that name. Keewanis might mean a soft drink, or an electric refrigerator, or a sanitary system for country houses.

They might change the spelling, but they could never hold to the pronunciation. The two went hand in hand. So this international dinner club is called "Keye-wan-is." No wonder every club has to have at least two parsons in it to keep down dissensions.

When Kiwanis was organized, Rotary was just beginning to shuffle along. It doesn't matter which is the larger and stronger; both have their place, and so have all the other noonday clubs. This is a Kiwanis story, and not a luncheon club yarn. It is, in fact, a Washington Kiwanis Club story, for this splendid organization is soon to celebrate its fifteenth charter anniversary, which will be on next Thursday, the 19th.

Hill to Preside.

Edwin F. Hill, who belongs to the tribe of Madison Indians, a branch of the Orange tribe of the Virginia Tuscaroras, on that occasion will have on his full tribal costume, war bonnet, deerskin leggins, moccasins and everything, for he is the president of the Washington Kiwanis. Some of the foremost men in the order are coming here to carve the roast and break the bottle and tip the cup—and make speeches. If you glance over the roster of the 180 members of the Washington Kiwanis you will shudder for the visitors, for surely none of them can be such able trenchermen or such facile orators as you will find in our city, and in this club.

Washington Kiwanis had its origin in the visit of W. H. Towles, the photographer, to Buffalo in December, 1916, where he went up to attend a convention of his craft and carry off a few high awards. Some Buffalo Kiwanian invited him to lunch. He went, he ate, he listened and he came away with the avowed intention of having a Kiwanis Club right here in Washington. That's all there is to the story, though when Kiwanis holds its anniversary meetings it makes a lot more out of it.

Just why Thursday was selected for the meeting day is one of the things I could not find out from Ed Hill. He thought it had a scriptural significance, and not being up very well on the Scriptures himself he left me in a fog of doubt. That's the way these industrialists and scientists have when instructing inquiring youth. The only Thursday I know of related remotely to the Bible is prayer meeting, which few Kiwanians ever attend. They go annually to hear one of their sky pilots preach. It might be well for Dr. John C. Palmer, one of their dominies, to invite them to his prayer meeting and put them through a course of Bible recitations, as he does his little Thursday night flock. That is a new suggestion—a novel one, too—for next year's agenda. The Kiwanis starts to going to prayer meeting!

Dr. Custis Lee Hall examines a pair of children in the orthopedic clinic at Children's Hospital as part of the Kiwanis Club's campaign for under privileged boys and girls.

Aids Under-Privileged Children.

If it only goes to church once a year, Kiwanis, and particularly the Washington Club, is doing a service for humanity that matches up with much of the very best service our churches are doing. It has many activities, but its work among the under-privileged children is the capstone of the edifice. And this work is done in such a kindly and unobtrusive way, and with such chivalry that it is welcomed rather than resented. No child helped through this service is ever exploited.

Let us look at one individual case, known in the records as No. 65. His name? That you will never know. In 1925 he was brought to the attention of the welfare department of the club. Five years of age then, he had a congenital malformation. "There was only one finger on the left hand and three on the right, webbed. There were three toes on the left foot and two on the right. There was no bone in the lower right leg and the left leg was crooked. He was operated on, the crooked leg straightened and a bone built into the right leg. The web fingers were separated. Braces were supplied. His hand was again operated on. Braces and shoes were supplied from time to time. He now walks to and from school."

Seven years ago that boy had never walked a step in his life. His case might have seemed hopeless. The other day Ed Hill was visiting at Weightman School, the school provided for crippled children, and on the playground he saw this boy playing ball. Dr. Custis Lee Hall, the orthopedic surgeon who reconstructed this broken and fragile piece of humanity, carried this boy to Philadelphia to a clinic held at a meeting of the American Medical Association; and he was the most interesting exhibit there. Hooray for Kiwanis, I say!

Two Schools Established.

At the suggestion of two members of this club, Radford Moses and Ellsworth T. Simpson, who did most of the work, Congress was induced to establish in Washington two schools, one for white and one for colored children, which are set aside exclusively for the crippled. These schools are the nursery, the great clinic, so to speak, of the free orthopedic work that the Kiwanis Club is doing. The club mothers them as a hen does her chickens; and there's a Scripture for that, too—even for the figure of speech.

Does it pay? Of course it does, the biggest dividends on the investment of any into which men pour their money. A good deed in a naughty world is always a paying investment; and I imagine these husky business and professional men lie down every night with a feeling of satisfaction in knowing that in good weather and in bad, come hot come cold, in sunshine and in rain, in prosperity and in depression, the orthopedic work goes on and poor little kids who probably should not have been brought into the world are being set up to fight their way against the world.

The under-privileged child is first in the affections of Kiwanis everywhere. Nothing can supplant it, not even a Jacob with his pot of lentils, or a Creole with his dish of red beans and rice, which is probably better grub than these gallant trenchmen sit down to every Thursday. But our Kiwanis has other ennobling activities.

Politics Banned at Meetings.

Politics is eschewed at its meetings, also all controversial matters. You never know that a Kiwanian is wet or dry until you see him with his foot on the brass rail, blowing foam from his mug of suds. But not every club can do the work of the big city organization, for it hasn't the laboratory in which to work. So other activities are planned.

Among them is the development of better relations between town and country. This almost trenches on politics, for in our American system from the beginning there has been a conflict between the urban worker and the rural plow hand.

In the handbook given me I find page after page of notations of the various work Kiwanis is doing among the country people, from offering prizes for farm exhibits, to giving scholarships to agricultural schools, stimulating home and garden improvements, and a thousand and one things that are being set up by all sorts of agencies to make the farm life easier, more profitable and more attractive.

Old Keewanis kept his hand, we are told, on the children, the boys of his tribe, and the modern Kiwanis is doing just that. If the world was John Wesley's Parish, which was a lot of territory for one mortal to work in, the Kiwanis is almost as far-sighted in its planning for the youth of America. In every community where there is a Kiwanis Club it is a stimulating agency for community improvement, and its activities are as wide and as wholesome as it would have the horizon of our young people.

anian governor of Memelland dismissed the German president of the Diet, Otto Boettcher. He charged that Boettcher was treating with Germany, thus imperilling Lithuanian sovereignty, as Memelland's foreign affairs are under Lithuania's control.

Germans will control the new Diet, just as they did the former Diet, and the League of Nations will doubtless be called upon again to settle the struggle.

Lithuania also is engaged in a bitter struggle with Poland over the annexation of the latter by Vilna, and has refused to establish diplomatic relations with Poland.

Memel, with a population of only about 36,000, lies 91 miles east of Koenigsburg, East Prussia. Its harbor will accommodate ships with a draft of 20 feet.

Although an important city in the Hanseatic League, the Poles and Lithuanians repeatedly burned it in the thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, and few historic buildings remain. In the seventeenth century Sweden took possession of Memel and it passed into Russian ocupation before Germany finally gained control.

which one keeps without any inner necessity * * *

"These utterances of Furtwaengler's, which, to say the least, were painful for the guests of honor present from abroad, constitute a regrettable slip. A musician, of all persons, should know what 'takt' is. ('Takt' in German means bith 'tact' and 'musical beat.')"

Members of the American colony later pointed out to Furtwaengler that his conception of American orchestras is "all wet." The ever-widening effort to supply popular stadium concerts, to furnish afternoon performances for the children, and to maintain civic orchestras as a matter of cultural development were cited to him as proofs positive that American symphony orchestras are anything but "pet puppies."

agricultural problems recently. He then cited the need for long-time land planning and utilization. Secretary Hyde already has initiated a move in this direction, and the chances are that both parties will include such a program in their platforms.

That, apparently, is the only concrete suggestion for farm relief entertained by the two parties at this time. While the Republican party will assert the benefits of the Farm Board, the Democrats are expected to seek political capital from it in repeated attacks during the campaign wars.

Meanwhile, national farm organizations are preparing their demands which will be incorporated in platform suggestions to be submitted to both parties. These demands will probably include reduction of industrial tariffs to an equality with agriculture, a readjustment of farm taxes and broader powers for the farm board to deal with crop surpluses.

A bill containing three plans—the debenture, fee and the Farmers Union allotment plan—are now before the House and Senate agriculture committees. There seems to be little chance of passage now because of the lateness of the session.

The fee has been vetoed twice. President Hoover has spoken publicly against the debenture idea, and is not believed to be in sympathy with the fee. Some say Gov Roosevelt has given considerable study to the fee, but has not committed himself on any plan. So, while crops of a new harvest sprout in election year, anybody with suggestions on how to help the farmers and attract the interest of the rural districts will be welcomed graciously by party leaders.

German Penal Code Author Dies.

Berlin, May 14 (A.P.).—Wilhelm Kahl, chairman of the Reichstag judicial committee, died today at 82. He campaigned for years for penal reform and was the author of Germany's new penal code. For a long time he was a defender of capital punishment but in recent years his attitude on that matter seemed to have changed.

his name, his father's industrial and banking connection, his own large wealth, the Harkness-Standard Oil fortune, Yale, Harvard and a very brilliant war record. He has risen by his brains, by his courage, by his hard work, and by his daring. Of course he might not have come so far so fast if he had had to worry about his job and carry an empty dinner pail. But Alexander Hamilton did, and so did Stephen A. Douglas, to name but two very noted examples of poor, unknown and obscure young men finding their place in the sun at an earlier age than the hero of this piece.

Mr. Ingalls was sent to an exclusive boys' school in his youth, and then to Yale, where he was knocking his brains out over Greek roots when the World War disturbed his studies. He was just 18, the same age as Alexander Hamilton when he signed up for the American Revolution. At once he laid down his books, thumbed his nose at his dull old Greek professor, and joined the famous Yale aviation unit.

It was a gang of "rough-necks" from our first families, all right. But they all had the hero-stuff in them; it was simply rioting in their veins. Overseas they went, the finest examples of Young America, and as we had no planes and England had a few, they got their training in England and joined an English squadron. Pretty soon he was in command of that squadron; and then he went into the combat zone and started to fighting Germans.

Just how he got connected with the American Navy this humble reporter does not know and could not easily find out. He is known as the "ace" of the Navy. Probably he was like the fabulous boy who always stood at the head of his class—of one. Anyhow, he was our lone naval aviator, or our single, solitary naval air-battler. And when the strife was over, and the honors were handed around, he found himself in possession of about all that one young man could hope to get. He had shot down six enemy planes and one or two enemy balloons; and that was a very fine score.

Why Prince Came Here.

England awarded him her celebrated Distinguished Flying Cross, and, what's more, sent the Prince of Wales over here to present it to him. Some of the reporters thought that young Edward of Wales came over to visit all of us, to hoof it about with some of our lovely young ladies, and to watch the international polo game. But they had the wrong information. Edward's first duty was to award that medal, and when he gave it to young Mr. Ingalls, our "ace" said, "thankee, sir," put it in his pocket, and went on back to Yale to complete his wrestling match with Greek roots.

Somewhere in this broad land of ours that medal is stowed away with two other medals that Uncle Sam's Navy gave this fighting son-of-a-gun from O-hi-o. He got every one of them in a fair fight, and, being no European nor bogus battler, he just never wears 'em. I just dare you to find any mention of those honors in his autobiography in Who's Who.

When Yale had polished him up mentally he went to Harvard and completed a law course, graduating in 1923, after which he joined one of the most distinguished firms in Cleveland. Senator Atlee Pomerene is a member of that firm, and David Ingalls was until he came to Washington to take charge of aeronautics for the Navy. It must be an able firm, to have Democrats and Republicans so mixed up in it. However, like the fabled firm of Ketcham & Cheatham, it gets the business going and coming. When President Coolidge needed a bang-up good lawyer in a certain well-known case, he selected Atlee Pomerene for the job; and the next Democratic President, if he has a similar matter to be attended to, will select a Republican member of the same firm—maybe David S. Ingalls. Who knows?

Mr. Ingalls was not simply talking when he told the press conference on coming here: "I am crazy about flying." That has been his chief enthusiasm. When he turned from the World War, with his blushing honors thick upon him, he continued his flying, using his personal plane to keep himself in trim. On entering business he took a leading part in inspiring the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce to participate in the new industry, and was the chairman of its committee on aviation. Through his efforts largely the Cleveland Municipal Airport was built, and the private airport in Chagrin Valley, which he uses with great frequency.

His money and his brains and his enthusiasm were poured into the development of airplane factories in Cleveland until that city became the center of the industry on this continent. If an aeronautics engineer designed a new plane, he took his plans to Mr. Ingalls, who studied them intelligently, backed them with his money, and when the first test plane was built, took it up himself as pilot.

Flew to His Job Here.

Elected to the Legislature, he drafted bills for the promotion of aeronautics, and pushed them through. From him came the program to map the air lines over the State of Ohio, and this was done in conjunction with the Federal Government, placing his State in the forefront in this particular.

In his own right he owned three planes. In these he commuted between his home and his office. He knew every mechanic in the Municipal Airport by name, and was never so happy as when putting on overalls and getting himself all messed up as a true mechanic does. His democratic, informal ways won the hearts of those lads, and I am sure that he can count on the vote of the Municipal Airport 100 per cent.

When he received his appointment from President Hoover he hopped into his fastest plane and commuted here to get it. The moment after he was sworn in he hopped into a car and drove down to the Anacostia field with Ol' Admiral Moffett to look over the Naval Air Station. Once there he bowed with perfect grace and courtesy to the group of officers and aviators in waiting to receive him, and that ceremony over he hopped into a new Voight Corsair plane and went aloft to the bottom of the lowest clouds and then cut loose. This time he was under severe inspection. No gallery of tea drinkers and bridge players was looking on. He had to strut his stuff, and he did strut it. Those case-hardened naval aviators had never seen a better performance, and when the new Secretary came down, side slipped his plane and made a perfect three-point landing, the gang cheered him honestly and cried: "Atta boy, Dave." He was elected.

In his three years in office Mr. Ingalls has done everything he could to promote aviation in the Navy and to bring about better concord with the Army Aviation Corps. Fortunately he and Secretary Davison are of the same mind in this, speak the same language, and smoke the same brand of cigars. One thing he has failed to do, and that is to restore the annual Army-Navy game, the biggest thing (so the dear public thinks) the two services do in peace time.

When in our city Mr. Ingalls rides in his big town car, driven by his big chauffeur. When commuting or taking a trip, he rides in his big plane, straps a big parachute on his chauffeur's back, slips him into the front cock pit, gives her the gun and away they go. Neither man has yet been killed, thank goodness, and neither is a member of the Caterpillar Club. They met with an accident in a fog in Pennsylvania while commuting from here to Cleveland April 22, 1929, and the plane was wrecked and they were shaken up, but no bones were broken.

Early last November the young Republicans of Ohio decided to take the job over from the old fellows and run it for a while. They drafted Mr. Ingalls, and he said: "Sure, I'll run. But you boys must help." And they have just come through their first battle, and won. Now they are in training for the next one. Which shows that Mr. Ingalls may be a "nut" about aviation, but he is also politically wise.

Mr. Ingalls is tall, lithe, firm-eyed. He is a student. He plays polo. He married Miss Louise Harkness, of New York, in 1922, before he had completed his law course. They have three young lady daughters: Edith, Jane, and Louise. What a man!

Mt. Vernon D. A. R. Chapter Will Celebrate Anniversary

Plans to Unveil Tablet for Eight Virginia Presidents at Rite Tomorrow.

By DOLLY PEYTON SHEPPERSON.

The Mount Vernon Chapter, National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, Alexandria, reaches its thirty-ninth milestone today, and will celebrate tomorrow by unveiling a commemorative tablet in honor of the eight Virginia-born Presidents of the United States, and also, at the same time, dedicate eight memorial trees on the Mount Vernon Memorial Boulevard, just south of Alexandria, in what is designated as the first triangular island after passing Hunting Creek bridge.

The chapter will meet at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon at the Belle Haven Country Club for the annual meeting and election of officers, and the invitation issued for the ceremony is for 3:45 p. m., when the guests will assemble at the club and accompany the chapter to the dedication point, a short distance away.

The commemorative bronze tablet is placed on an old stone, one of the lock stones of the old Chesapeake & Ohio Canal, which was built under the supervision of George Washington, and the curtain will be drawn by Mrs. Eleanor Selden Washington Howard, the daughter of Col. John A. Washington, the last private owner of Mount Vernon, and a collateral descendant of George Washington; and Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, the widow of President Wilson, representing the first and latest Virginia Presidents.

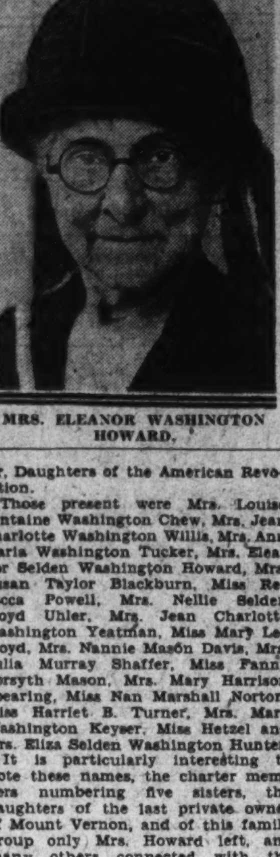
The dedicatory speech will be made by Dr. Lyon G. Tyler, of Charles City County, Va., the grandson of President Tyler. Dr. Tyler was at one time president of William and Mary College, and is now the publisher of the Virginia Genealogical and Historical Magazine. Invocation will be by the Rev. Dr. William Jackson Morton, rector of Historic Christ Episcopal Church, Alexandria. Music will be furnished by the military band from Fort Humphreys.

The names of the Virginia-born Presidents and their dates of service are inscribed on the tablet. They are: George Washington, 1789-1797; Thomas Jefferson, 1801-1809; James Madison, 1809-1817; James Monroe, 1817-1825; William Henry Harrison, 1841, died; John Tyler, 1841-1845; Zachary Taylor, 1849-1850, died, and Woodrow Wilson, 1913-1921.

Following the exercises at the stone and trees, the chapter and guests will return to the Belle Haven Country Club, where tea will be served under the direction of Mrs. Thomas E. Sebrell, Mrs. Malcolm Matheson and Mrs. William D. Ord. They will be assisted by the following junior members of the chapter: Miss Caroline Rust, Miss Elizabeth Rust, Miss Grace Powell, Miss Frances Sinclair, Miss Virginia Cary Dawson, Miss Kathleen Douglass, Miss Susan Smoot Thomson and Miss Sellie Selden Sommers.

At this time the beautiful poem, "The Roses Nowhere Bloom So White as in Virginia," which has been set to music by Miss Henrietta Wirt, of Washington, will be sung, for the first time, by Mrs. Hugh Oram, of Washington. The birthday cake will be cut by Mrs. Howard and Col. Harrison H. Dodge, of Mount Vernon, the only survivors of the group at Mount Vernon on Mary 15, 1893, when Mount Vernon Chapter was organized.

Miss Susan Rivers Hetzel, of Washington, called a group of women together and on that day at Mount Vernon the first steps were taken toward forming Mount Vernon Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution.



MRS. ELEANOR WASHINGTON HOWARD.

Those present were Mrs. Louise Fontaine Washington Chew, Mrs. Jean Charlotte Washington Willis, Mrs. Ann Maria Washington Tucker, Mrs. Eleanor Selden Washington Howard, Mrs. Susan Taylor Blackburn, Miss Rebecca Powell, Mrs. Nellie Selden Lloyd Uhler, Mrs. Jean Charlotte Washington Yeatman, Miss Mary Lee Lloyd, Mrs. Nannie Mason Davis, Mrs. Julia Murray Shaffer, Miss Fanny Forsyth Mason, Mrs. Mary Harrison Spearing, Miss Nan Marshall Norton, Miss Harriet B. Turner, Mrs. Mary Washington Keyser, Miss Hetzel and Mrs. Eliza Selden Washington Hunter.

It is particularly interesting to note these names, the charter members numbering five sisters, the daughters of the last private owner of Mount Vernon, and of this family group only Mrs. Howard left, and many others connected with the Washington family.

The chapter has been active since its inception, in patriotic work and stimulating interest in the history of this country. Medals have been awarded in the public schools from time to time for the best composition treating of the Revolutionary period.

In 1901 a chapter of the Children of the Revolution was formed by this mother chapter, called the Ann McCarthy Ramsay Chapter, C. A. R., and many of the members of the present organization received their training in the work of service in this group. In 1901 also the chapter took the initiative in the restoration of Old Pohick Church, and appeals were sent out all over the country for this object, the responses being prompt and liberal.

The history of this chapter gives the names of those on its roster who attained national office, among them Miss Hetzel, Mrs. Eleanor Selden Washington Howard, Mrs. Albert Doyle Brockett and Mrs. William A. Smoot. Mrs. Howard and Dr. Kate Waller Barrett were at different times elected State regents of Virginia.

The present officers are Mrs. Charles Alexander Swann Sinclair, regent; Mrs. Thomas E. Sebrell, vice regent; Mrs. Robert Miller Reese, treasurer; Mrs. Charles Calvert Smoot 3d., recording secretary; Mrs. John Taylor Stephenson, corresponding secretary; Miss Elsie Snowden, historian; Mrs. William B. Lloyd, registrar, and Mrs. Eleanor Selden Washington Howard chaplain.

CAPITAL ECHOES

say, was a break for Roosevelt. It rescued him from obscurity, they insist, and paved the way for the presidential boom that was to follow.

* * * *

GOV. ROOSEVELT'S course of action with respect to the presidential nomination, according to well-informed Democrats, actually was charted in War Springs, Ga., whither he has been going for several years to take the cure for infantile paralysis.

An influential Georgian, one now located in Washington, is credited with having given Roosevelt the advice which led to Roosevelt's rupture with Smith.

Roosevelt was to hold aloof from Smith and from John J. Raskob, and he was to soft-pedal prohibition until his friends in the South could get his presidential boom under way.

These things Roosevelt did, and the South flocked to him. In 1928, four Southern States had bolted the party. At the time it was explained that Smith's wet stand was the cause, but everybody knew it was Smith's religion. At any rate, no complaints arose in the South a few months ago when Roosevelt ceased his soft-pedaling and became an outspoken wet.

* * * *

THERE was no party rule which required Roosevelt to consult Al Smith about his presidential ambitions. Smith himself didn't have to consult John W. Davis, the 1924 nominee; Davis didn't have to consult James M. Cox, the 1920 nominee.

So that whether Roosevelt chose to ask for Smith's blessing was his own business. However, it is not difficult to understand how Smith felt when he was ignored.

Smith, by virtue of the fact that he was the nominee four years ago, is known as the "titular leader" of the party. Generally this is a meaningless tag. Cox and Davis, for example, slid gracefully into the background after their defeat in '20 and '24. But Smith takes his title seriously, very seriously. He can't forget those 15,000,000 people who voted for him in 1928. He thinks they still look to him for leadership. And feeling this way, he must have thought it rather shoddy on Roosevelt's part to ignore him.

* * * *

THEN, too, Smith must have felt that Roosevelt should have consulted him if only because of what had been done to revitalize the party. After the 1928 election, the party, defeated and rent asunder, was in a bad way. Some people even pronounced it dead. Then Chairman Raskob, backed by Smith, called off the wake and went into action. He hired Jouett Shouse and Charles Michelson, and these two began an amazing campaign of attack on the Hoover administration. Soon the Democratic party was again a lusty organization, full of fight and confident of victory.

The first sign of an internal battle came at a meeting of the Democratic national committee at the Mayflower Hotel in March, 1931. Raskob planned to ask the committee to consder his "home rule" liquor plan and to recommend it to the national convention. Roosevelt, who had remained in Albany, wired to his supporters who were here and urged them to fight Raskob's proposal. Thus the issue was drawn. Raskob and Smith were disgusted with Roosevelt, believing that his move was designed to win the favor of the drys.

* * * *

IT is a fact that thereafter the drys seemed to have no hesitancy in lining up behind Roosevelt. His clash with Smith and Raskob had become a decided political asset.

After the Mayflower meeting all hope of bringing Roosevelt and Smith together was abandoned by men in the party who knew how things stood. The "Stop Roosevelt" movement got under way, and when it appeared that Roosevelt was making a runaway race of it, Smith himself became a candidate.

Here a little speculation is in order. What would be the situation today if Roosevelt at the beginning had called on Smith and asked his support? Would Smith have given it? If he had, this much is certain: Roosevelt could not then have followed the advice of his Georgia friends and soft-pedalled prohibition. If there is one thing that Smith loathes, it is a pussy-footer.

However, as was related at the outset, Roosevelt chose to say nothing to Smith. Whether or not his silence was of the golden variety will be known next month when the Democrats meet in Chicago.

STATUE TO BE READY AT CAPITOL FRIDAY

North Carolina to Dedicate Piece to Great Educator, Charles B. Aycock.

The statue of the late Charles Brantley Aycock, affectionately known as the Educational Governor of North Carolina, will be placed in Statuary Hall at the Capitol Friday. The stone likeness of the former North Carolina Governor is the work of Charles Keck, noted sculptor and cost $15,000.

Josephus Daniels, wartime Secretary of the Navy, will present the statue on behalf of the Aycock Statue Commission. The address of acceptance will be made by Representative Lindsay Warren, of North Carolina. Gov. Bax Gardiner, of North Carolina, chairman of the commission, will preside. Other North Carolina dignitaries will participate in the ceremony.

Two statues are allowed each State of the Union in Statuary Hall and the late Gov. Aycock's statue will be ranged alongside that of Zebulon Baird Vance, Civil War Governor of North Carolina.

Aycock served as Governor of North Carolina from 1901 to 1905. During his administration, he led the fight in the State for popular education. He died suddenly at Birmingham, Ala., while delivering an address and his last word was "education."

Gov. Aycock led the speaking campaign against the Fusionist-Republicans and Populists in 1898, retrieving the State for the Democratic party. Two years later he was elected governor. He was one of the greatest stump speakers in the Nation.

EARLE

"THE MOUTHPIECE," Warner Brothers' picturization of a story by Frank Collins, adapted to the screen by Earl Baldwin, featuring Warren William, Sidney Fox, Aline MacMahon and Ralph Ince. Directed by James Flood and Elliott Nugent. Reviewed Saturday afternoon.

By NELSON B. BELL.

Whether or not this closely-knit tale of shady legal practices is based on the life of a famous New York attorney, now deceased, is of no especial importance. Whether biographical or purely fictional, it is resourceful and exciting entertainment that is consistently engrossing. Furthermore, it establishes Warren William as an actor of deft methods, intelligence and authority and will do much to enhance audience appreciation of the generous talents possessed by Sidney Fox and Aline MacMahon, actresses of opposite types, but identical proficiency.

The character impersonated by Mr. William, from which the play derives its name, is that of a former assistant district attorney, who, conscience-stricken at having sent an innocent man to the electric chair, becomes exclusively the counsel of the criminal world, devoting his brilliant talents wholly to securing acquittals instead of convictions.

In the process of acquiring a clientele as extensive as it is ominous, "Vince" Day discovers that phychology and "putting on a good show" has more weight in swaying juries than the strict interpretation of the law. Thus we find the high point of the drama in a courtroom episode in which the attorney for the defense brings about the discharge of his client by drinking a bottle of the poison with which he is accused of having committed a murder—knowing, however, that it takes the poison 45 minutes to act and having previously plied himself heavily with neutralizing medication against any delay in reaching his physician, awaiting him with a stomach pump, within the allotted time!

These are the shrewd deceptions which not only defeat the law, but defraud Day of his one chance of happiness with the little stenographer in his office with whom he has fallen deeply in love. It is her scorn that would have brought about his redemption had not that happy consummation been precluded by the gangster bullets that mowed him down in the street before his own office building after he had delivered his ultimatum to the spokesman of the hoodlums who thought he knew too much to live.

There is, of course, a deal of hokum in any story of this pattern, but Mr. William in this instance assumes the pivotal role with such disarming naturalness, such admirable change of pace to suit best the exigency of the moment and such skillful reading of lines that are both peppery and pithy that his vehicle is made to seem, perhaps, considerably better than it is. And that is very, very good.

Sidney Fox, as the straight-thinking and unspoiled typist from Kentucky, desperately in love with a bank messenger hailing from the little home town, and Aline MacMahon, in the made-to-order role of secretary to the blackleg lawyer whose weaknesses were whisky and women, not necessarily reading from left to right, have a great deal to do, too, with the convincing quality of a narrative that might so easily be merely tawdry.

There are many more who contribute to the general excellence of the film, foremost among them being Ralph Ince, as the underworld's bondsman; Guy Kibbee, William Janney, Walter Walker, John Wray and Stanley Fields.

On the stage, the radiant Miss Maxine Doyle introduces four acts of more than usual merit, three of which lay heavy stress upon dancing. The one that doesn't is presented by Peter Higgins, the popular young tenor of both stage and radio, who earned a clear title to headline honors by rendering a considerable group of songs in splendid voice, with Frank Dixon at the piano.

The bill is opened by Betty Jane Cooper and the Lathrop Brothers, extraordinary solo and unison dancers, who are followed by Russell, Marconi and Jerry, instrumentalists, singers and dancers who interlard their work with clever comedy and score an instant hit. The most versatile act of the four is provided last by Wally Vernon, a nut comic a purest ray serene, assisted by his father and his wife. Here is a structure of sheer foolishness built, however, on a sound foundation of real ability.

The screen program is augmented by a "Looney Tune" cartoon, "Bosko and Bruno;" the Universal News, with Graham McNamee, and E. M. Newman's illustrated Traveltalk on "Dear Old London." A diversified and dandy diversion.

"Little Alice" Returns to England.

New York, May 14 (A.P.).—Mrs. Reginald Hargreaves waved a fond farewell to America today as she sailed for the English haunts where as a child she inspired Lewis Carroll to write the story of "Alice in Wonderland." To her son, Capt. Caryl Hargreaves, who will remain here another week, she dictated a brief message to her friends in America, expressing her appreciation for making her stay here "so pleasant."

BURGOO KING RACES TO GLORY IN PREAKNESS VICTORY; NATS, OUTHIT, BEAT TIGERS, 6-4, FOR 5TH STRAIGHT WIN

Four-Run Rally in Eighth Aided by Detroit Error And Four Passes Off Uhle

Tying Tally Scores on Richardson's Fumble With Two Out and Two Runs Are Forced Over by Walks.

Myer Hits Home Run Inside Park in Third; Burke and Marberry Relieve Brown After Tigers Gain 4-2 Lead.

By FRANK H. YOUNG.

WHEN Stanley Harris piloted the 1924 Washington Team, it turned in so many weird and unexpected victories on its road to the pennant that it was generally known as the "team of destiny." Yesterday, this same "destiny" hit Harris squarely in the face and allowed the Nationals to snatch a game from the Tigers, now headed by the former Nat pilot, when the most optimistic of the 11,000 present had given up any hope of winning.

The final score was 6 to 4, with an error by Third Baseman Richardson giving the Nats a chance to come from behind and score three of their four runs in the eighth. It was the Nats' fifth straight win.

Richardson had made several brilliant stops during the game and two were out and men were on first and third when he fumbled a roller by Reynolds in this eighth round. This let the tying run trickle over the plate. Then Pitcher George Uhle, like the cow who gave a good bucket of milk and then kicked it over, went up in the air and walked three men in a row. When he passed Judge, the sacks were filled and runs were forced home as first Bluege and then Berg drew passes.

Nats Appeared Beaten Until Rally.

Until this stage of the proceedings, the Nats looked like a beaten team. Lloyd Brown started on the hill for them but was not at his best and had granted four runs before being relieved by Bobby Burke in the fifth. The latter pulled out of a tight hole and then performed brilliantly through the eighth, yielding but one hit in his four-inning shift. Sam Rice pinch-hit for him twice in the Nats' big eighth, both opening and closing the session, and this brought Fred Marberry to the hill and he easily held the Washington margin safe.

In winning the game, the Nationals did the unusual in scoring six runs with the need of but five hits. Richardson's error and Uhle's passes accounted for three of these and the other trio were hammered home. The biggest blow of the game was a homer by Buddy Myer, which came with none on the paths in the third.

That Myer did not stop to pick daisies on the base-paths is indicated by the fact that, although Gehringer and Johnson both tripled to the same spot—in the angle of the fences to the left of the score-board, both of them were held at third while the Nat second-sacker scored rather handily.

Tigers in Front Most Of Game.

The Tigers broke the ice in the first and the natives knotted the string in their half, but after that the Tigers were always in front until the Nats passed them at the finish. This was, by the way, only the third game which the Tigers have lost by more than one run, this being an encore of Washington's Friday triumph and the Yankees doing the trick the only other time.

Brown walked Davis starting the proceedings and a useful out, his theft of third and Gehringer's single, resulted in a run. The home crew quickly got this back in the lower half on Manush's single and West's double.

Two were out in the third, when the Tigers broke the deadlock, and they did it most impressively. Gehringer tripled, Lawrence singled and Johnson tripled, two runs resulting. In the home half Myer got one of these back by lashing out his four-bagger.

When Rogell opened the fifth with a single and Stone doubled him home, Brown was told by Manager Johnson to take the afternoon off and Burke went to his relief. He walked Gehringer, first to face him and both runners advanced on Lawrence's sacrifice. Burke fanned Johnson, much to the delight of the crowd and pulled all of the way out of the hole by holding Richardson to a short hoist to Reynolds. The Tigers got but two hits thereafter, one off Burke in the eighth and a scratch one off Marberry in the ninth, but never again seriously threatened.

Meanwhile, between Myer's homer in the third and his single in the

IN THE WAKE OF THE GAME

By FRANK H. YOUNG.

THE Nationals, whose longest winning streak this season has been six in a row, will be out to equal it this afternoon, when they open a four-game series with the St. Louis Browns. Indications are that southpaws will toil on the hill for both teams, for Manager Walter Johnson plans to call on Carl Fischer, while Walter Stewart or "Preacher" Wally Hebert is expected to get the call from Pilot Bill Killefer.

The latter had sent word ahead that he would use Irving Hadley, former National, today, but had a change of heart and started him against the Mackmen yesterday.

Those interested in staging the Sam Rice Day on Tuesday, July 19, call attention to the fact that no contributions are being asked, although they will be accepted if offered. All admirers of Rice are asked to do is to buy a ticket to the game. The "purse" for the player will be all money taken in over an average Tuesday attendance.

With a southpaw opposing the Tigers, Manager Bucky Harris shuffled his line-up like a deck of cards. Muddy Ruel replaced Rube Hayworth behind the bat, with Bill Lawrence going to center in place of Gerald Walker. Lawrence is 3 inches over 6 feet tall, hails from Portland, which team

Pipgras Hero In Yankee Victory

Runs Scoreless Inning Streak to 19 as Chisox Bow.

6-0 Victory Is Fifth in Row for New York Team.

NEW YORK, May 14 (A.P.).—George Pipgras, veteran Yankee hurler, pitched his second shutout in a row today, blanking the Chicago White Sox, 6 to 0, in the only game of the series the weather let the teams play.

It was a brilliant performance that carried Pipgras' streak to nineteen scoreless innings and the Yankees to their fifth straight victory. Until two were out in the ninth, the Sox got only two hits, both in the fourth inning. Then Pipgras eased up, gave two hits and walked a man to fill the bases. In that tough spot, he forced Red Kress, moved to the clean-up position for Chicago, to fly out and end the game.

Selph Only Chisox to Get Two Hits.

Carey Selph was the only Chicagoan who could hit Pipgras twice.

Thanks to Earl Combs, the Yankees had a lead all the way, but Sad Sam Jones made it a pitchers' battle for six innings. Combs, the first man up for the Yanks, lifted the ball into the right field bleachers for a home run.

Up to the seventh, the Yanks got only two more blows. Chapman walked to start the seventh inning, Dickey singled and Lazzeri was passed to fill the sacks. Frank Crosetti came up and brought the first two home with a single. Pipgras beat out a bunt to load the corners again and Combs finished the rally with another single for two more runs.

The Yanks scored their other run in the eighth, Pipgras driving it home with a single.

Braves Win, 7 to 6, As Brandt Stars

Cubs' Rally in 9th Checked by Relief Hurler Who Strikes Out Two.

Chicago, May 14 (A.P.).—"Dutch" Brandt stepped in with a brand of superrelief pitching today to halt a Cub rally and save a 7-to-6 victory for the Boston Braves. The victory pushed the Braves within two games of the pace-setting Cubs in the National League race.

The Braves broke a 5-all deadlock at the expense of Charlie Root, who relieved Burleigh Grimes at the start of the ninth inning, on a home run by Bill Urbanski, a hit and stolen base by Walley Berger, and a long drive to center by Schulmerich, which scored Berger.

The Cubs retaliated by driving "Socks" Seibold off the mound with a double by J. Moore and a single by Riggs Stephenson, which scored one run and left the tying one on first with none out.

Then Brandt was called. He delivered by forcing Hartnett to force Stephenson and followed through by striking out Grimm and Bill Jurges.

BURGOO KING, bumped by MAD PURSUIT at start, was sent up on outside to avoid interference going to first turn, upon recovering gained a contending position midway of the back stretch and, coming with excellent speed for the final drive, withstood a strong drive and was up in the final sixteenth mile. TICK ON, a forward factor and racing kindly, fell back slightly midway of the second turn, was placed to punishment and, finishing resolutely when coming again, was racing fastest at end. BOATSWAIN, quick to begin and displaying early speed, saved all possible ground while racing slightly reserved and fought it out desperately when put to a drive.

The car was still locked, indicating the thief had a key that fit. Then Torland remembered it was Friday, the thirteenth.

Albany-New York Race Draws 80 Boats Today

Albany, N. Y., May 14 (A.P.).—Tomorrow morning some 80 tiny outboard motorboat racers will roar down the Hudson River in the hardest of the "outboard marathons," the 132-mile Albany-New York race.

The racers will have the record of 3 hours and 10 minutes set last year to shoot at. It was made by "Red" Woodworth, Northwestern University football star from Boston, who set this record, better by 12 miles an hour than the speed made in the first year's contest, in 1928. Each year the speed has been higher, climbing from 29.8 miles per hour to 36.6, then to 38.7 and last year jumping to 41.8 miles under Woodworth's wild driving.

Some of the best known drivers in the country are among the entrants for tomorrow's race.

Bradley Colt Makes Game Finish to Outstay Tick On And Boatswain by a Head

Derby Winner Makes up Ground Lost Early in Race to Overtake Long Shot Pace Setter in Stretch Drive.

Jockey James Beats Robertson and Hanford in Whipping Finish; $50,000 Classic Proves to Be Three-Horse Race.

By WALTER HAIGHT
(Post Staff Correspondent).

PIMLICO RACE TRACK, May 14.—Burgoo King is king. Forty thousand acclaimed his right to the seat of royalty among the Nation's 3-year-olds here today when the princely-bred son of Bubbling Over won the Preakness in one of the most thrilling stretch battles in the history of this famous race. Burgoo King, accused of a coup d'etat in the Derby, referred to as a lucky winner of the Kentucky classic and allowed to parade to the post at odds of better than 3 to 1, emerged from a driving finish a head in front of Tick On and another nose in front of Boatswain in a race as truly run as any major horse event of history.

Burgoo King, the colt that needed the lightning track, stepped the mile and three-sixteenths of the forty-first Preakness over a course at least a second slow in the 1:59 4-5, slightly less than 2 seconds off the track record. Burgoo King, which as a 2-year-old, bowed in defeat to plebian juveniles, sent his winnings for the past eight days to $102,690.

Burgoo King in Select Group.

Burgoo King, the colt that Jockey Laverne Fator frowned upon in favor of Brother Joe as his Derby mount, carried the colors of E. R. Bradley up to the pinnacle of horsedom to be unfurled with those of the great Sir Barton and the brilliant Gallant Fox as the only thoroughbreds to win a Derby and a Preakness.

There is no denying, Burgoo King is king, and Jockey Eugene James is the power behind the throne.

Mrs. Louis G. Kaufman's Tick On was not disgraced. Walter M. Jefford's Boatswain did better than expected. Mad Pursuit and the handy Sande were fourth. War Hero, Gusto, Daisabouro, Curacao and Lucky Tom were not horses enough to come close.

Tick On, which set something of a record for bad post manners at Churchill Downs, served notice as the field paraded to the post that he was in no depressive mood. The 9-to-5 favorite plunged out of the line to go bobbing up the stretch. At the post eight of the colts walked into the stalls, but Tick On stood on his hind legs. When he came down he was backward in the stall. But Robertson swung him around and the colt walked up to the barrier and the field was off.

Boatswain Leaps To Front.

Boatswain, Buddy Hanford up, leaped to the front, followed by Tick On, with Lucky Tom, on the outside, third, and Curacao and Burgoo King close up. Boatswain stuck close to the rail as the field began to bank the clubhouse turn. Tick On was a length behind, with Burgoo King, on the outside, following close. A big gap showed before the remainder of the field.

Up the back stretch Boatswain clung to that length advantage. Burgoo King moved up virtually abreast of Tick On and there was no noticeable move from War Hero, Mad Pursuit, or the others. Boatswain was still running in front with half of the swing to the stretch passed, but Tick On and Burgoo King both began to cut down the lead of the son of Man o' War. James, on Burgoo King, went to the outside, while Robertson, on Tick On, took to the rail. Hanford went to the whip as the three horses crowded together.

Great Stretch Battle Sensed.

The crowd roared as it sensed the sterling battle about to be unfolded. At the sixteenth pole the heads of the horses slid off at an angle with Burgoo King, now driving, passed Boatswain and Tick On, coming up on the tiring Boatswain. The three jockeys were working like mad, with their knees almost bumping. Five yards from the finish both Burgoo King and Tick On seemed to make a dive for the line. The jump carried Burgoo King the farthest and the hanging of the winning No. 6 was a mere formality.

Burgoo King is king.

Alpheus is no stage struck jumper. This son of Pennant evidently must have a crowd to do his best. Yesterday as the customers were piling through the turnstiles, Jim Healy saddled this gelding and sent him out to vie with a half dozen others. Alpheus proceeded to make a show of the field.

Jockey Wren rated the gelding along nicely and the horse took the jumps perfectly, leading for most of the journey to draw away to a five-length advantage at the finish. Totalisator was second after giving up the chase, with Polinos third. Mrs. F. Ambrose Clark owns the winner, which paid the handsome mutuel of $64.70.

Little Danny Meade gave Brown Pet a Preakness ride to win the second race fashioned for maiden 3-year-olds. Meade brought the daughter of Brown Prince II up on the outside at the stretch turn to take the decision from Tug o'War, son of Man o'War, in a driving finish. Day Dreamer was third. Meade laid behind the fast pace and made no move until the far turn.

Wedding Ring and Indiantown staged a duel in the third race that was decided in the judges' stand. Indiantown, much the best juvenile, was fighting to pass Wedding Ring in the stretch, but was bumped repeatedly by the Glen Riddle Farms representative. At that, Indiantown was only beaten by a nose. Jimmy Smith, who had the mount on Indiantown, went up to see the judges, but they had seen. Wedding Ring was disqualified, moving Indiantown on top, with Acautaw second and Volwood, a long shot, third.

Frumper won a thrilling stretch battle with Uluniu in the Preakness eve race, Jockey O'Malley getting the Pennant gelding up in the closing strides. Fleet Flag drove his way into third money. Major General set a sizzling early pace that forced him to fold up in the stretch drive.

Col. Bradley Scoffs At Retirement Rumor

Belmont Park, N. Y., May 14 (U.P.). Col. E. R. Bradley, owner of the Kentucky Derby winner, Burgoo King, denied today truth of rumors from Lexington, Ky., that he contemplated quitting racing.

"I'll be racing horses until my last day," he said. "I didn't go to Maryland to see Burgoo King run in the Preakness because I am convalescing and my physician advised me to avoid the excitement."

Col. Bradley said that thought of his quitting at this time when he appears "to have the best racing establishment in the country" was particularly ridiculous.

Chantilly, France, May 14 (U.P.).—Mme. Renee Devilmoran defeated Mme. Simon Monier, 5 and 4, to win the French women's amateur golf championship today.

BURGOO KING CAPTURES PREAKNESS IN BLANKET FINISH

Tick On Bows To Winner By Head

seat in the grandstand and clubhouse and overflowing onto the lawns and into the infield where long queques of fans took up places of vantage, thrilled to the victory of Alpheus in the first race, the price of $64 for $2 leaving a pleasing taste in the collective mouths of the lucky ticket holders and giving the other betters a vicarious sensation of longshotism.

Pimlico's wooden stands, outmoded by the demands of a classic crowd, groaned and creaked under the weight of the assembled thousands and seemed even to bulge as the mob taxed every available inch.

The grandstands, lawn and betting ring were problems for the betters who were forced to thread, even jam, their way through the gathering in the efforts to get to the betting windows. The move to the cashiers' windows after the race was not so concerted, but the pay-off lines were still heavier than on any other day of the meet.

Clubhouse Reeks With Swank.

The difference betwen the grandstands and the clubhouse was the difference between a county fair meeting and an exclusive hunt club gathering. While the motley mob in the stands and on the lawn were sweating to maneuver about the premises, the clubhouse, reeking with swank and milady's latest, presented comparatively easy lanes to all windows.

Pimlico's members and guests were there in force and the blue book of the turf had turned out for the Preakness. Other tracks might have succumbed to the demands of the dollar, but Pimlico remains the only race course in the country where one can not buy one's way into the clubhouse, and that includes haughty Belmont and proud Saratoga. One must be duly accredited to avail oneself of the clubhouse facilities here, or one is fated to view the races from the grandstands or infield.

Baltimore has grown up around Pimlico, and the track that is the oldest racing course now operating in the country makes a great point of this tradition, but the hum of street cars easily visible across the back stretch lent an added touch of the urbanity that has enveloped the old course.

Tips as Free as Sunlit Air.

But the crowd was out to see the Preakness and that coming event cast a shadow over the preceding races on the program. Speculation on the $50,000 added purse for the field of select 3-year-olds was on the tongues of the multitude and tips were as free as the sunlit air.

Pimlico had a made-to-order day for its Preakness, the warmest of the meeting, with a kindly sun beaming down upon the 40,000 all afternoon and transforming a track that had been cuppy and muddy into a strip that was just short of lightning fast which guaranteed the participation of Burgoo King, the Derby winner, who was here to defend the laurels he won last week.

Three scratched reduced the Preakness field to nine, making for a more truly run race than last week's Derby which saw twenty entries go to the post, a bulky and unwieldy field that took its toll from Tick On, the favorite, last Saturday.

Scratches Reduce Field to Nine.

The longshot, Marmion, was the first declared out of the race, while the scratching of Portam was a foregone conclusion when he was permitted to race yesterday. But the Loma Stable, which saddled Tick On, withdrew Barcelona Pete, which is supposed to be a heavy duty horse and would have raced if the track had remained slow.

Burgoo King and Tick On were the names most frequently heard among the bettors, but there were kind words, too, for War Hero, the Man o' War colt, Mad Pursuit, of the Mereworth stud, Curacao, the Greentree Stable's hope and Luck Tom, J. J. Robinson's winter campaigner.

MALCEWICZ SHOWS AT BOLLING

Defeated Caddock for Title; Faces Meyers on Tuesday.

According to the latest figures just released by the Census Bureau, there are seventeen former wrestling champions still in the leering business and about that many more burly gentlemen hailed by their relatives and claques as "uncrowned champions."

But Joe Malcewicz, an underweight heavyweight, who rassles for old Bowser College about eight nights a week, is one of the few who ever won the world's championship, such as it is, and refused to advertise it. Before you laud this bruiser of totally unsuspected modesty, it might be added that he does not brag about winning the title because it would reveal him as a possessor of one of the worst cases of procrastination ever recorded.

Malcewicz defeated Earl Caddock and Joe Stecher when those worthies held the star-spangled belt which once belonged to Frank Gotch.

Malcewicz was the Joe Turner of Utica, a local pride, but had gained no notice outside of that village's boundaries. It was the fashion of those days (1919) for the champion to barnstorm, meeting local prides by the bushel. Malcewicz threw Caddock in a bruising 90 minute match. It sounds screwey but Malcewicz and his manager failed to claim the title.

In Boston in 1925, after Stecher had beaten Caddock the champion was listed to meet a matman named Jake Brissler, supposedly of Des Moines, Iowa. But when the time for the grappling came, it was Malcewicz who strode into the ring. Stecher is said to have beaten a hasty retreat. The referee raised Malcewicz's hand in victory, but once again the dolt's manager overlooked claiming the title.

The old-timer has been at it ever since, just beneath the top flight, stroking his way around the mat centers of the land with the second sixteen pachyderms. He meets Dr. Fred Meyers at Bolling Field Tuesday.

It will be an outdoor show, if Matchmaker Ahearn's bad luck disappears. Others on the card are Ed Don George, former champion of the Bowsers, who meets Danny Winters; Jack Sherry vs. Ivan Podubney, Len Macaduso vs. Charley Hansen and Bull Martin vs. Charley Strack.

Aurora Handicap To Dr. Freeland

Former Preakness Winner Scores Upset at Expense of Sprinters.

Aurora, Ill., May 14 (A.P.).—Dr. Freeland, which won the Preakness three years ago, captured the Century of Progress Handicap at Exposition Park today.

The victory of the 6-year-old son of Light Brigade-Toddy was surprising because it was not thought that the old campaigner could sprint fast enough to conquer such speedsters as Tannery and Burning Up, which finished second and third respectively.

Going to the front in the 6-furlong dash, Dr. Freeland, ridden by Jockey T. Salazar, made every post a winning one. Dr. Freeland had four and one-half lengths to spare over his rivals at the end of the journey.

Dr. Freeland covered the distance in 1:12, the fastest time for the present meeting, paying $11.14 for each $2 win ticket.

GODWIN AND BANOVIC BATTLE

Star Light Heavies to Clash in Feature at Portner's.

Bob Godwin, who is headed for a New York appearance and seemingly for a place in the forefront of light heavyweight ranks, returns to the scene of several previous triumphs tomorrow night when he meets "Bingo Joe" Banovic, Binghamton, N. Y., star, in the eight-round feature of the Alexandria Day Nursery's benefit card in Portner Arena.

Seeking victory No. 6 in the Alexandria house of punch in the space of six months, Godwin this time encounters probably the hardest puncher he has yet opposed there. Banovic has a reputation for throwing his entire energies into the beginning of a bout.

The Southern light heavyweight king is also known as a strong starter, so Banovic figures to treat the fans to something they have never seen in a Godwin match; to wit, a whirlwind opening. And there is nothing to indicate that Godwin will not have to display his best form in order to snatch the decision.

Godwin Regarded Favorite.

Godwin, for two particular reasons, rates the choice as favorite. First, he is now in the best shape of his career and is in the midst of a winning streak. Bingo Joe may enjoy just as good condition but doesn't boast the streak of success that strings along with the Southerner. Second, the bout means more to Godwin. He can not afford to lose with a chance of fighting on the Walker-Uzcudun card lying immediately ahead, while Banovic, though still well regarded by promoters, is not particularly sought after.

Banovic has a national rating and has met more first-rate boxers than has Godwin. He has beaten Joe Sekyra, Billy Jones, Charley Belanger, Pete Latzo and Bob Olin. He has been defeated by George Courtney, Maxie Rosenbloom, Billy Jones and Paul Swiderski. Godwin's experience has been chiefly with Southern boxers, notable of whom is Joe Knight. His victory over Cowboy Owen Phelps at Portner's two weeks ago boosted Godwin's stock nationally. In Collyer's Eye, Godwin is rated .280 and Banovic .247.

For the first time in some weeks, the Nursery Athletic Association has matched a pair of heavyweights for the semifinal bout. This will bring together Bob Tow, Godwin's 200-pound sparring partner, and Wid Mathews, of Baltimore.

Tow Has Opposed Good Ones.

Tow, judging from his record, has possibilities. He has beaten Dewey Kimrey, heavyweight champion of the Carolinas, and has fought close bouts with Joe Knight and Battling Bozo. Mathews will be remembered by local fans as having lost twice to Marty Gallagher. He has been comparatively inactive the past six months, although he has prepared for this fight.

Three newcomers to Alexandria fights will be presented in the series of four-round preliminaries. Roy (Kid) Manley, a native of Arkansas, who has done a lot of glove-tossing around St. Louis and other Western cities, will engage Jesse Belt, local slugger. Joe Raspi, Baltimore lightweight, will make his debut as the opponent of Marino Marini, of this city, and Soldier Ran, of Walter Reed Hospital, will get his Portner's baptism as the foe of Doug Swetman, Washington featherweight. Swetman recently turned in an impressive exhibition against Bob Portna.

Boxing Bits Hereabouts

By JACK ESPEY

OPERATIVE 7-11-7-11-1-2-3-12, or Patsy Donovan in case the numbers stagger you, tells me that Reds Barry has received in a round-about fashion an offer to join Max Schmeling's sparring staff which carries with it a six-round bout on the heavyweight championship card in New York in June.

That, indeed, is a compliment to Barry's ability as a boxer and comes most unexpected in view of the fact that Reds has no national reputation and is hardly known to major league pugilistic scouts.

But instead of jumping at the chance to gain some national publicity—as he would if he helped Herr Schmeling prepare for Jack Sharkey and then appeared on the same card with them—Barry is looking at the proposition quite calmly. Of course, Reds' binoculars have been focused by Donovan, his manager, who has been around the ring racket some fifteen years.

Before making any decision in the matter, Barry and Donovan will await the outcome of Reds' 10-round battle with Maxie Rosenbloom, on May 23, at Twin City arena. Reds figures to attain valuable publicity by virtue of keeping this engagement with the light heavyweight champion. The 18-year-old Southeast boy is doing well enough at this stage of his career, it seems, to be able to match his wares with a boxer of Rosenbloom's caliber regardless of the fact that the match is an overweight affair. Barry will suffer no great loss of prestige should Rosenbloom defeat him.

However, Barry and Donovan are not overlooking the possibility that Reds may be the winner of this opening feature of the Laurel (Md) establishment, and with such an eventuality in mind they have tentatively formed plans for other important bouts in which they would have something to say about the caliber of opposition he would meet. This would not be the case if they accepted Schmeling's offer. Reds might be shoved in with somebody far his superior, with a resultant decline in his fortunes.

Donovan desires to rate Barry along slowly, placing him against boxers with whom he compares favorably. That is what any wise manager would attempt with a youthful prospect like the redhead. It would do Barry no good to have his ears knocked off in his debut among the elite. He has never been counted out.

Rosenbloom figures to defeat Barry, but not severely. "Slapsie Maxie" doesn't pack a kayo wallop. But there are any number of heavyweights worthy of engagement on the Schmeling-Sharkey card who do possess the dynamite, and it might be Barry's luck to draw one with whom he couldn't cope.

Boiled down, the several considerations leave us with the thought that Barry and Donovan, though ambitious, are not trying to shoot at the moon.

George Nerron, Greek heavyweight champion, may show in a nearby ring in the near future. Nerron, a member of Jimmy Erwin's stable that numbers Cowboy Owen Phelps and Joe Fino, lost a close ten-round decision the other night to Young Stribling. The Greek, who weighs 200 and stands 6-feet-2, boasts victories over Salvatore Ruggirello, Paul Cavalier and Knute Hansen. He also went the distance with Tuffy Griffiths during the two years he has been in this country.

Little Fino, who won many admirers through his courageous though losing performance against Baltimore Kid Groves a short while ago, hopes to engage either Benny Schwartz or Billy Landers. The busy Mexican bantamweight recently fought a draw with Dick Welsh, who is rated better than Groves or Landers.

Benny Schwartz was seconded in his recent bout with Landers by a man whom he defeated nearly twelve years ago—Patsy Donovan. Against Landers, Benny looked as good as he did against Patsy, so says the later. Charlie Short missed one by giving the decision to Landers.

JABS, HOOKS AND CROSSES—Jack Portney meets Lope Tenorio, a star a few years back, in the feature bout tomorrow night at Carlin's in Baltimore . . . Tex Stovall, a game fighter in the Washington Barracks days, now manages the Mayflower Hotel laundry . . . Tex was forced to quit the game because of eye trouble . . . Bingo Brodie, the Wild Bull of Ninth street, has hung up the gloves and gone to California . . . A scrambled ear accompanied him . . . Patsy Lewis, promising Baltimore lightweight, is out of the sport at the request of his parents . . . Scouts for Benny Leonard watched Ken Overlin against Joe Smallwood the other night . . . Leonard and Overlin should pack 'em in at one of the nearby arenas . . . Billy Strickler's ability to stand up under the terrific punishment handed out by Bill Flemster in those last two rounds showed what perfect condition will do for a boxer.

Red Whisk Is Upset By In High at Downs

Churchill Downs, Ky., May 14 (A.P.).—A mild surprise was sprung in the thirty-first running of the Bashford Manor Stakes, feature of an excellent half-holiday card, when In High, racing for the Dixiana Stud of Charles Fischer, scored in a driving finish over C. C. Van Meter's Red Whisk. The latter, undefeated in two starts, had been hailed as the outstanding juvenile prospect of the West and was a 6-to-5 favorite in the mutuel wagering. Second money was his portion, however, with the show going to R. W. Collins' Levaal.

Eleven contested the issue in the $5,000 fixture, but all apparently were outclassed with the exception of the three placed horses.

KLEY MEETS PINETZKI HERE

Battle of Mat Freaks Due Thursday at Griffith Stadium.

RASSLING'S two greatest freaks, the ponderous Leo Pinetzki, 8-foot arms and 280 pounds of weight, and Fritz Kley, the German, with rubber bones, will meet in what probably will be an hilarious sports travesty Thursday night at Griffith Stadium in the first outdoor show of the year for the Curley college boys, Joe Turner, local agent.

The feature match brings together Dick Shikat and Howard Cantonwine, while other tangles concern George Calza and Sandor Szabo, Milo Steinborn and Mattress Kirilenko and two more affairs of the anatomy.

Cantonwine, the educated rassler, has not been beaten since coming East about two months ago. He has tossed, or held even, some of the best known, if not the best, rasslers, on the circuit. The Iowan is tremendously strong, weighs 230, and seems to have found that the game holds something more than a growl and a flying tackle.

But it does not seem likely that his winning streak will continue against Shikat, who never loses. Shikat is an important fixture in the fraternity. There is little doubt that he is as good as Londos, and most wrestling fans of the more dyed-in-wool type hold him better. Suffice to say that when Londos is in one corner of Curleydom, Shikat can draw crowds in the other section, because people seem interested in a matman whom the "champion" will not meet, and the turnstiles click merrily on.

The Pinetzki-Kley affair should be fine burlesque. Kley is a marvelous acrobat, as supple as a hot water bottle and is said to be a right good wrestler. He has lost only one match since coming to America five months ago, and that to Shikat.

Ladies, accompanied by escorts, will be admitted free of charge. The customary prices will prevail and the ring again will be pitched about midway between the home plate and the pitchers' box. Probably some ringside bleachers will be erected.

Top Flight Wins Belmont Feature

Whitney Filly Eased Up by Workman, Who Rides Four Winners.

Belmont Park Race Track, May 14 (A.P.).—Top Flight, C. V. Whitney's famous filly, today redeemed much of the prestige she lost by her dull performance in the Wood when she made a show of a smart field of 3-year-olds of her sex in the Acorn, a test of one mile.

The dark brown daughter of Dis Donc, loloking stronger and more like her real self than in her last outing, displayed the kind of form that made her the champion 2-year-old of 1931, and was eased up to win by a half a dozen lengths over the Greentree Stable's Parry. The Wheatley Stable's Unique was third, three additional lengths back.

A crowd estimated at close to 20,000, the largest of the season, enjoyed the first perfect weather for the sport and a brilliant program. It gave Top Flight a great cheer after the event and young Sonny Whitney the proud owner, wore a broad smile as he welcomed his horse and rider in the paddock.

Jockey Workman was much in the limelight, his triumph on Top Flight giving him four straight winners for the afternoon. Top Flight's victory was worth $12,850. She completed the 8-furlong jaunt in 1:39 flat but was eased up after being under restraint during the running. She was the 9-to-10 favorite.

MYER IMPORTANT COG IN SPEEDING NATIONALS' MACHINE

Buddy Shines With Judge, Reynolds

Mastery of 2d Base Play Achieved After Long Fight.

Spirit Plus Mechanical Ability Make Him Regular.

By FRANK H. YOUNG.

WHILE palms are being awarded the Washington team in general and Carl Reynolds, the rejuvenated Joe Judge and the pitchers particular, it might be well to give a share of the glory to one Buddy Myer, an earnest, hard-working young man who is holding down the second sack on the infield.

Time was when Myer was almost a joke as a second-sacker, but he has stuck to the job, listened to advice from all sources, tried to pick out the good from the bad, and finally has developed into a mighty good man. Myer, like Cronin, goes after everything and is not playing for any records, yet, despite the fact that he was charged with several errors on throws that other second-sackers would not have gotten to, he tied with Max Bishop as league-leader for his position last year, making but 12 errors in 743 chances for an average of .984.

Oddly enough, last season Myer took part in more double-plays than any other second-sacker in the league except Oscar Melillo, of the Browns, and it was his weakness in this respect which threatened to keep him out of the Washington line-up altogether. In fact, at one time, Manager Walter Johnson was considering trying to convert him into an outfielder.

Myer a Fixture At Second.

But Buddy seems to have found the knack of doing his stuff with no lost motion and there are few second-basemen in the league who could displace him now. Myer's greatest weakness seemed to be when he was called upon to pivot while in the middle of a twin-killing. He frequently had to take a step past the sack before turning and making his peg to first and on other occasions used to reach the base on the wrong foot, thus causing loss of time and sometimes making him easy for a base-runner to upset.

Some of the so-called experts declare that Myer still covers the sack and makes the pivot in an unorthodox manner, but the fact remains that he usually gets his man and, after all, that's what counts.

In finally winning himself a regular berth, Buddy had to win any number of battles. The Cleveland Indians picked him up in 1925 after he graduated from the Mississippi Aggies, but he had trouble coming to terms, refused to go to Dallas, and was made a free agent, later joining the New Orleans Club, where he became an outstanding star. Scout Joe Engel bought him for Washington and shortly afterwards he suffered a leg injury and was benched. As the Nationals paid quite a fancy price for him, they asked the Pelicans to send Buddy here so they could doctor him and this was done.

First Chance to Play In 1925 Series.

It was in the 1925 world's series with Pittsburgh that Ossie Bluege was put out of commission by a blow on the head from one of Vic Aldridge's fast ones and Myer, though out of condition, was pressed into service in the final games. In eight times at bat, he cracked out two hits.

The next season, he was given the regular shortstop position, but failed to quite come up to par. In 1927, Bucky Harris, then manager, had visions of a possible pennant provided he could get a better shortfielder, and so he traded Buddy to Boston for the veteran, Topper Rigney. Buddy finished that season and completed 1928 with the Beaneaters and, during the off-season was gotten back in a five-for-one trade, the Nats giving up Infielders Bob Reeves and Grant Gillis, Pitchers Milton Gaston and Horace Lisenbee and Outfielder Bigelow.

Walter Johnson was made manager starting 1929 and he decided to give Buddy a shot at third, with Ossie Bluege shifted to short, but the infielder showed that he was not so hot at third, either. Toward the latter part of the season, Myer was given a trial at second. He did not set the world afire with his work and might have lost his job to Jack (Sonny Boy) Hayes had the latter shown any power on attack.

Hitting Ability "Sold" Myer.

Myer barely got by during 1930 but seemed to suddenly find himself last season and now appears to be set for several years.

While Buddy is a likable fellow, it was not because of his sweet disposition that Manager Johnson bore with him so long, but because he appeared to be a natural hitter. He hit .336 with New Orleans and .304 in 1926, his first year in the majors. He fell to .281 in 1927, but had averages of .313, .300 and .303 to show for the next three years. Last year, he had to be satisfied with a .293 rating, and he is traveling at a slower clip than this now, but he is out there trying and it's dollars to doughnuts that he will top the .300 mark before this season ends.

As to his fielding, he is good on short flies to the outfield, can go far to either side for grounders and, now that he has mastered the pivot, his former enigma, is making a big hit with the fans—and believe us, they are hard masters. If Buddy satisfies them, he must be good.

KIDS HELP JURGES.

Bill Jurges, Chicago Cubs' third baseman, has improved his hitting by practicing against a gang of youngsters who come to the park each morning to pitch to him and "shag" flies.

SUTTERS WIN DIXIE NET HONORS

Singles to Clifford; He and Brother Win Doubles.

NEW ORLEANS, May 14 (A.P.).—The Sutter brothers, of Tulane University, cleaned up the Southern conference tennis tournament for their alma mater late today when Clifford Sutter, Green Wave ace and captain, took the singles title from Clayton Lee "Ted" Burwell, of Sewanee, defending champion, in a straight set final, 6—4, 7—5, 6—3.

Yesterday Clifford paired with his younger brother, Ed, to take the doubles title in a victory over Perry Eastman and Charles Hume, also of Tulane. It was formerly held by Hinky Hendlin and Ed Yeomans, of North Carolina, and was vacated by their graduation last year.

Third Conference Title For C. Sutter.

Today's victory for Clifford Sutter gave him the conference title for the third time. He won it also in 1929 and 1930, but did not play in the conference last year.

He went into the finals today after a rather easy morning victory over Judge Beaver, of Georgia, 6—2, 6—1, 6—2.

Burwell, however, was extended to win the other semifinal from Ed Sutter in a match that went for five gruelling sets and was visibly tired for the final.

Burwell finally pulled the semifinal match out of the fire 3—6, 2—6, 6—3, 11—9, 6—2, but he had to show championship form to do it. The fourth set provided the best tennis of the whole tournament. With his title at stake, Burwell made his real comeback in this set to break down the challenge of the Tulanian.

HARPER TOPS VA. SCHOOL GOLFERS

Has Five-Stroke Margin Over Field at Woodberry.

WOODBERRY FOREST, Va., May 14 (A.P.).—Chandler Harper, of Wodrow Wilson High School, Portsmouth, and 1930 Virginia amateur champion, played his usual fine brand of golf today to win the second annual Virginia Interscholastic Tournament sponsored by Woodberry Forest School. His 73, 75—148 was 5 strokes ahead of the field.

Harper, who qualified and arvanced to the first-round match play in the National Amateur Tournament at Beverly last year, played consistently, and a 6 was his highest total on any hole during the day. His apparent improvement and steadiness drew widespread comment.

The team trophy went to Woodrow Wilson High School, Clarence Parker, Harper's team mate, turning in a card of 156 to take fourth place in the individual list and assure team honors.

A playoff for the championship in the junior division was necessary when Peyton Bowling, of Roanoke High, and W. Tomlinson, of John Marshall, Richmond, turned in cards of 159, but Bowling won the playoff on the first extra hole.

NATS WIN AS TIGERS GET ASSIST

Triumph, 6-4, After Error and Uhle's Wildness.

eighth, Uhle had pitched hitless ball. Burke was due up starting this round and Rice hit for him, lofting to Stone. Then Myer lined a single to right and was forced midway by Manush, who grounded to Davis. West walked and Cronin came through with a single which let Manush score and advanced West to third.

The Nats were still a run behind and two were out, but Carl Reynolds was up and the fans who were easing their way out of the park decided to wait and see what he would do. His best was a roller between third and short. Richardson went after it, fumbled the ball and the score was tied. Then Uhle walked three Nats in a row and the game was over except the formality of giving the aliens a ninth-inning chance at bat.

The Tigers outhit the Nats almost two to one, getting nine hits, including two triples and a double. Gehringer and Johnson carried dynamite in their bats with a triple and single apiece, with Lawrence getting two one-basers. Myer was the only home player getting more than one hit.

picked him up after his graduation from Santa Clara University.

Immediately after yesterday's game, the Tigers hopped a rattler for Detroit, where they play the Athletics this afternoon. Then both teams hustle to the Quaker City to open a series there tomorrow.

The Bluege-Cronin combine robbed Rogell of a hit in the first. The former deflected the grounder with a one-hand stab and Cronin gathered up the ball and made the killing at first.

Two good plays came in rapid succession when Richardson made a diving stop to rob Berg of a hit ending the second and West raced over toward left to fasten himself on the end of Rogell's liner opening the next session.

Uhle walked West on four successive balls in the third.

Lawrence raced over to the wall in left-center to make a brilliant catch of Reynolds' looper opening the fourth. Then Johnson followed with a leaping grab of Judge's liner while backed up to the score-board in right. Murder!

Burke fanned Johnson with two on in the fifth for the first strike-out of the game.

Manush walked starting the home sixth on four successive wide ones.

Reynolds really hit one in the sixth with Cronin on third at the time. The drive was directly at Uhle, however, hitting his glove and deflecting to Gehringer, who turned in the out which ended the inning.

Judge made two good plays in succession in the seventh. First he took a low peg from Cronin on the half-bounce and then he chased back to make a pretty overhead catch of Stone's pop foul.

Burke showed unexpected speed in covering first on Richardson's hot grasser to Judge in the eighth. He stood his ground as the runner charged into him.

When Myer singled in the eighth, it was only the fourth hit for the Nats and the only one since Myer's homer in the third.

Pinch Hitter Sam Rice had two chances yesterday, both opening and closing the Nats' eighth.

Gallaudet's Track Team Bows, 68-58

Rayhill Individual Star as Lynchburg Annexes Meet Here.

Although slender Jimmy Rayhill again came through with a herculean performance, Gallaudet College's track team suffered its third straight defeat yesterday, bowing to Lynchburg College by a score of 68 to 58 at Kendall Green. Rayhill won four events and got a second place for a total of 28 points.

Lynchburg presented a well-balanced team that outscored Gallaudet by 20 points in the running events. This margin stood up under Gallaudet's drive for points in the weights and jumps.

Rayhill captured the century dash in 10 2-5 seconds; won the broad jump with a leap of 20 feet, 6 inches; took the high jump at a height of 5 feet, 8 inches, and topped the pole vaulters at 10 feet, 8 inches. He was defeated by Haggard in the 220-yard dash.

Johnny Leicht, of Gallaudet set a new low hurdles record for Hotchkill Field by skimming the wood in 26 1-5 seconds. The old standard, 26 4-5, was established in 1928 by Oscar Gerth, of Catholic University.

WONDER BREADMEN WIN.

Wonder Bread Midgets triumphed over Thompson's Furniture Midgets, 16-3, in a loosely played game yesterday. Erratic fielding was chiefly responsible for the Thompson boys' downfall. The teams are entered in The Post's Capital City League, which opens today.

Japanese Capt. Writes Of Big League Game

New York, May 14 (A.P.).—Capt. Keichiro Sekiguchi, second baseman on the St. Paul University nine of Tokyo, wrote down his impressions of a baseball game between the New York Yankees and the St. Louis Browns for the World-Telegram, as follows:

"We have been oftentimes told about protests in arguments of professional ball players raised against umpires in the field, but so far as this game was concerned there was no simple such occurrence, and all players were so eager to do their best at any given moments. This fighting spirit in real earnest and sincerity gave us a big lesson.

"Perfect fielding, mighty batting, speedy running—almost gave us an idea that it would be better for us to abandon baseball. In short, there will remain forever in our minds a simple admiration to the fact that such a marvelous, flawless, and mighty game can be played."

V. P. I. Freshmen Stop Little Generals, 13-4

Special to The Washington Post.

Blacksburg, Va., May 14.—V. P. I.'s Freshman nine trailed Washington and Lee Freshmen until the eighth inning today, but ran wild in the eighth to score ten runs and defeat the Brigadiers, 13 to 4.

Fourteen V. P. I. batters went to the plate in the Gobblers' big inning. Seven hits, including a home run by Pickup, a triple by Day and doubles by Lindsay and Craig, rang from Poly bats. The visitors scored all four runs in the first inning. Webber led off with a hit and Turner was walked. Short scored both with a timely double. Wissler received a free pass and scored behind Short when Jones hit another two-base bingle.

28 TEAMS LAUNCH POST'S CAPITAL CITY LEAGUE TODAY

14 Unlimiteds Seek City Crown

New Teams in Ranks as 9th Year of Play Is Opened.

Seniors, Juniors and Midgets Promise Warm Battles.

SANDLOT baseball moves in on the city in full force today for a four-months' stay as 28 teams take up where the Miller Furniture and Dor-A nines left off yesterday and complete the opening of the Capital City League. Their goal is recognition as city champions in their respective divisions, and their reward will be the individual gold baseballs offered annually, by The Post, sponsor of the league.

Today's games mark the ninth birthday of the loop and from all indications the teams have prepared a warm celebration. Fourteen crack unlimited teams, the largest number ever to seek the flag in this division, head the list of entrants. Well-known and popular teams, such as the Dixie Pigs, St. Joseph's, Congress Heights, Columbia Heights and Union Printers will face the barrier. Their number is augmented by the addition of several new clubs in the class and a few teams which graduated from senior ranks last season.

Dixie Pigs Hosts To Jewelers.

Quite a bit of interest has been aroused by the meeting between the Dixie Pigs, runners-up to the District champions the past three seasons, and Horning Jewelers. The game will be played at Berwyn. The Horning Nine captured the Georgetown Church League pennant last season, playing for Eldbrooke M. E. Both teams rank with the best and a close game is expected.

But the other frays will attract their share of the fans' interest. St. Joseph's is scheduled to meet Federal Storage, a team composed of ployers who performed with the Chevy Chase Grays and champion Takoma Tigers last season. Rock Creek Service, senior champions as Olmsted Grill last season, makes its bow in unlimited ranks opposing Diamond Cab, a team of unknown caliber.

In the senior division the teams scheduled today appear to be evenly matched. Koontz Service and Clifton Barbers annually sponsor strong teams. Swann Service proved its mettle last season, while the Takoma Tigers have earned an eviable reputation since their organization a short time ago.

Junior Division Is Puzzle.

The junior division presents an enigma for the dopesters. Such teams as Georgetown, Fussell-Young, Wheeler Club, Dixie Polish, Southwest Merchants, and Dor-A, can not be counted on to proceed in an orderly manner. This section promises to spring many thrilling upsets before the season is very old.

A hot-bed of action for the last three years, more mile-a-minute action is looked for from the midget entrants. Wonder Bread, its rule broken last season by Spengler Post, is thirsting for revenge, but it will have to travel as a fast clip to keep ahead of its opponents. Arlington Post, a newcomer, National Pale Dry, one of the leading contenders last season; Goodacre's, and Thompson's Furniture promise to be stubborn obstacles.

Charlotte Hall Bows To Central Nine, 4-3

Central High School scored a 4-1 victory over Charlotte Hall Military Academy on the latter's field yesterday. Johnny De Bettencourt, elongated twirler, held the Cadets to a lone hit as his mates pounded Buckler and Murphy for eight. Central did all of its scoring in the first two innings. Raub and Thompson led the victors' attack.

Stallings' Home Run Wins for Richmond U.

Richmond, Va., May 14 (A.P.).—Capt. Stallings, making his last appearance at the plate as a University of Richmond player, blasted a terrific home run out over the heads of the V. M. I. Cadet outfielders here this afternoon to break up a hurling duel and give his team a 4-to-3 victory.

The Spiders were trailing by one run, when Taylor, first up in the eighth, drew a pass. Vial sacrificed and Sherman fanned, and Mason, pitching for the Cadets, was seemingly out of a hole, since Stallings had failed to hit in three previous attempts. But he connected with a fast one, pushing in Taylor and crossing the home plate himself, standing up.

Harvard Lacrossemen Defeated by Navy, 6-2

Special to The Washington Post.

Annapolis, Md., May 14.—Harvard's lacrosse team threw a big scare into the Navy camp here today, playing the Middies to a stand-off, 2 to 2, in the first half, but in the second half the Middies staged a full-steam-ahead assault to register four more tallies and blank the enemy, thereby making the final count 6 to 2. Huroch played a great game at goal for the Crimson.

The teams battled for nearly ten minutes before Sammy Moncure, Navy ace, shot the first goal. Eight minutes later Owens followed with a tally for Harvard. Immediately after this Owens got the ball on the face-off and made a straight drive down field to put the ball into the net, and give Harvard a lead at 2 to 1. Two minutes before the close of the half Smith scored and put the Navy on even terms.

The Sailor lads virtually played the Crimson off their feet in the second half, Moncure scoring two more goals and Morton and Dial one each.

CAPITAL CITY OPENER TO MILLERS

Dor-A Defeated, 6-3, as 1,000 Watch Senior Game.

THE curtain went up on the 1932 season of the Capital City League, sponsored by The Post, yesterday, as more than 1,000 fans witnessed Miller Furniture Co. score a 6-3 victory over Dor-A in the senior division. The game, played on the West Ellipse, was a feature of the Festival of Youth program.

The Miller lads, favorites to win the senior championship this year, earned the victory with their flawless fielding and timely slugging. In addition to this George Wood displayed his usual form on the mound and set his opponents down with five hits. A brief respite in the eighth inning resulted in a pair of markers for Dor-A.

It was a costly victory for "Cack" Curtin, coach of the Millers, as he had wagered Carey Maupin, an outfielder on the same team, an ice-cream cone to a chocolate bar that the latter would not hit a home run. Carey came through with his circuit clout in the fourth inning with a mate on base. In this same round Charley Bradley and "Milly" Reigleman poked their bats in the way of a couple of Bob Ruble's pitches, and with more Miller men loitering around the bases it cost Dor-A two more runs.

Although he was nicked for ten bingles, Bob Ruble, Dor-A twirler, did a bit of hitting on his own account. He led his team with two safeties in three trips to the tee.

The remaining teams entered in the senior division, with the exception of Waverly, will open their campaigns today.

Maryland Frosh Nine Tramples Towson High

Clouting briskly behind the stellar hurling of Al Farrell, University of Maryland's Freshman Baseball Team marked up its seventh win in eight starts by walloping Towson (Md.) High School, 13 to 2 at College Park yesterday afternoon in a seven-inning engagement. It was the yearlings' final game of the campaign.

While Farrell was holding the Baltimore County nine to four hits and fanning five, the Old Liners were pounding Gore, Towson's starting hurler, and Brueckman, his successor, for 15 hits for 20 bases. Curly Byrd, jr., Maryland second baseman, led the assault with three bingles in four times at bat, including a triple.

NAVY CHECKS MARYLAND ON TRACK

Score 89 2-3-36 1-3 as Old Liners Win But 3 Events.

Special to The Washington Post.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., May 14.—Field and track athletes of University of Maryland usually furnish keen competition to the Annapolis Midshipmen, but not so today, when the Tars romped to an easy victory, 89 2-3 to 36 1-3.

The Middies won firsts in five of the eight track events, and virtually cleaned up in the weights and other contests afield, except for a tie in the pole vaulting. The Old Liners, however, made a stronger showing on the cinder path than results indicate, most of the contests being extremely close. Piggott, of Maryland, turned in a good performance in the 220-yard low hurdles, breasting the tape virtually by a hair ahead of Kastein. He also won the 120 high hurdles over the same Navy man.

Hardman Lowers 2-Mile Mark.

An outstanding feature from the Navy viewpoint was the performance of Hardman, long-distance runner. He smashed the Naval Academy record for the 2-mile run by 20 seconds, negotiating the distance in 9:47. Waybright, Navy's dash star, who ran the 440 for the first time today, defeated Sonen, of Maryland, by 15 yards, and was within half a second of the academy record for the event. Cronin was the other Maryland winner on the track. He took the half-mile run.

VA. SWAMPS NAVY NINE, 16 TO 2

Brewer Holds Middies Safe as Teammates Slam Ball.

Special to The Washington Post.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., May 14.—The University of Virginia administered a severe lacing to Navy on the diamond here today, the final count being 16 to 2. The Cavaliers piled up a four-run lead in the first three innings, and ever after that the issue was never in doubt.

W. Brewer twirled a steady and effective game throughout for the Virginians and was given splendid support by his teammates. For six innings the Tars were completely at his mercy, Kossler connecting for the first safety in the seventh. The middies got their other five hits in the eighth and ninth, but sharp fielding held their count of runs to two. Aside from fine pitching, W. Brewer was conspicuous in the hitting line, getting three safeties out of five trips to the plate, one of them a triple.

Special to The Washington Post.

Annapolis, Md., May 14.—St. John's College lacrosse team made its last appearance of the season on its home grounds today by ringing up a victory over Swarthmore College, of Pennsylvania, 5 to 1. The visitors offered little by way of stout opposition, so the local collegians took things pretty much as they pleased, making frequent substitutions, until practically the whole squad had a workout at one stage of the game or another.

Pike scored the lone goal for Swarthmore in the first half. Lynch and Ziegler carried the brunt of the attack for St. John's.

Charlotte Baseball Magnate Succumbs

Charlotte, N. C., May 14 (A.P.).—Felix Hayman, senior owner of the Charlotte (Piedmont League) Baseball Club, died here today from a stroke of paralysis. He was about 55. Death was unexpected.

Hayman actively entered baseball in 1919 when the old South Atlantic Association was reorganized. With W. M. Moore, he took over the Charlotte club and the two have operated it continuously since.

Widely known as a keen baseball man, Hayman developed a reputation as a shrewd judge of young players, and made up for lean seasons at the gate by selling players to higher leagues. Often more players were sold from the Charlotte club than from all the other clubs in the circuit combined.

EASTON CLUB BEATEN.

Easton, Md., May 14.—The Dagsboro, Del., team defeated the Easton Blue Jays at Federal Park today by the score of 12 to 7. The feature of the game was the heavy hitting of the visitors. The score by innings follows:

PENN'S CREW VICTOR IN UPSET

Harvard Is Second in Front of Navy; Plebes Bow.

Special to The Washington Post.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., May 14.—The University of Pennsylvania's varsity crew loomed as the "dark horse" and swept to a big triumph in the main event of the rowing regatta staged on the Severn River this afternoon, of which the Naval Academy played the part of host. The Crimson bladesmen of Harvard finished second, half a length behind the winners. Navy with its pace halted after two of the oarsmen caught "crabs," trailed a length and a half in the wake of Harvard, while Massachusetts Tech was a poor fourth.

The victory gave the Quakers the lion's share of the day's laurels, as the Red and Blue sweepsters also finished in the van in the brushes for 150-pound and freshmen eights. And Rusty Callow's pupils did not forget to give him a big hand of applause at the close of the day's activities. The Navy oarsmen did not go without a big slice of glory, for the Middies junior varsity swept to a smashing victory by 2½ lengths over Harvard with Penn two more lengths in the rear and Tech last.

The varsity, jayvee and freshmen races were pulled over the 1¾-mile course, while the lightweight crew covered the Henley distance of 1 5-16 miles.

The order of finish and times of the respective races were as follows:

Varsity-Pennsylvania, first, 8:4[illegible]; Harvard, second, 8:43.3; Navy, 8:5[illegible]; Massachusetts Tech, 9:03.4.

Jayvees—Navy, 8.38; Harvard, 8.4[illegible]; Pennsylvania, 8.56; Massachusetts Tech, 9.00.

Freshmen — Pennsylvania, 8.5[illegible]; Navy, 8.58; Massachusetts Tech, 9.1[illegible]

115-pounders—Pennsylvania, 6.50.[illegible]; Navy, 6.52.6; Massachusetts Tech, 6.54.

It will be noted that the Navy jayvees covered the course in 5 seconds better time than the victorious Penn varsity.

It was generally believed in rowing circles here that the varsity brush would prove a duel between Navy and Harvard, hence the victory by the Quakers came as a decided surprise. The Red and Blue oarsmen rowed a magnificent race, overhauling Harvard, which had a slight lead in the first half-mile, and then maintained the advantage to the end, but it was such a slight advantage that the result was in doubt practically until the last few yards of the course. Whatever chance the Naval lads had, however, was wrecked when with only a quarter-mile to go, two of the oarsmen in the center of the boat crabbed the waters. The crews at the time were pulling within a boat length of one another, with the Tars holding nicely in third place, and apparently having plenty left for the finishing drive. The two mishaps, however, caused their shell to drop back more than a length and they were unable to recover the lost ground. The Penn oarsmen in the meantime hit up a rapid beat to stave off the gallant challenge that came from Harvard.

Ambassador Ferrara Named Cuban Secretary of State.

The Cuban Ambassador and Senora de Ferrara, who have been in Havana for several weeks, will arrive in Washington tomorrow to remain until May 22, when they will return to Cuba, where the Ambassador will assume his duties as Secretary of State of Cuba.

It is with deep regret that Washington will bid farewell to the Ferraras, who during their several years in the Capital have been most popular not only with diplomats and officials, but with the host of friends made here. The regret, however, will be tempered with pleasure for the Ambassador, who will soon grace the highest post in his country's cabinet with the same ability and charm

Mr. Gray S. Foster Marries Miss Charlotte Childress

The marriage of Miss Charlotte Childress, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John W. Childress, to Mr. Gray Southerland Foster, son of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Gray Foster, of New York, took place yesterday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock at the residence of the bride's parents in Twentieth street, in the presence of only the members of the immediate families and a few close friends. The Rev. Dr. C. Ernest Smith, rector of St. Margaret's Episcopal Church, performed the ceremony, having officiated at the marriage of the bride's parents, and her sister, Mrs. Francis Meade Tomkins. A reception was held immediately following the ceremony.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of ivory satin, made along princess lines, with a long train, and trimmed with point applique lace. The veil of tulle fell from a cap of the lace and she carried calla lilies. The house was decorated with a profusion of spring flowers, apple blossoms, smilax and snapdragon. The ceremony was performed before a fan-shaped screen, banked with smilax and spring flowers, a small prie dieu having been arranged in front of the screen.

Mrs. Francis Meade Tompkins was matron of honor and the only attendant. She wore a frock of apricot chiffon, made on long lines, and a picture hat of beige straw, trimmed with ribbon to match the frock. She carried talisman roses. Mr. Glen Varick Foster was best man for his brother. At the reception Mrs. Childress and Mrs. Foster stood together to receive the guests, the former wearing a gown of beige chiffon and lace, and the latter pale green chiffon.

Mr. and Mrs. Foster, after a wedding trip by motor through Virginia, will go to Nashville, Tenn., where they will reside. They have taken a house on the Dickerson pike, about five miles from Nashville.

The out-of-town guests at the wedding included the brother-in-law and sister of the bridegroom, Mr. and Mrs. James Strothers, of New York; Mr. and Mrs. Harold Foster, of Plainfield, N. J.; Mr. Hegeman Foster, of New York; Mr. and Mrs. Avent Childress, of Scarsdale, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Scott, of New York, and Mr. and Mrs. Gregg C. Birdsall, jr., of New York.

Smart Society to Attend Horse Show Exhibit Today

Unique Sunday Diversion at Bradley Farms Awaits Capital Folk; Many Charity Garden Parties and Cabarets Scheduled for Near Future.

WASHINGTON society will enjoy a unique experience today, with a real horse show for diversion after church services, all because of the inclement weather the first two days, Wednesday and Thursday, of the scheduled show at Bradley Farms.

Al fresco fetes will be both numerous and beautiful from now until the 1st of June, and most of them for charity. The largest and most attractive ones will be the one on Wednesday at Esta Brook, the estate of Col. and Mrs. Arthur O'Brien on the edge of Rock Creek and the park, which will be for local charity and is being arranged elaborately, and following this on Friday, in the same place, the Democratic Women's Club will give a fete and cabaret, and still another, on the same afternoon and evening, at the National Women's Country Club, with all kinds of attractions, for the benefit of the club and of Chapter 3 of the Colonial Dames of America, making a counter attraction.

Then after these lovely fetes—cabarets, fete champetre and just plain lawn parties—there will be the piece de resistance in the garden of the new British Embassy, when on June 3 the Ambassador and Lady Lindsay will depart from the custom of their predecessors and celebrate the king's birthday with a large garden party, to which they have invited a number of young people as well as the otherwise. The birthdays of the sovereigns of England have been celebrated fittingly every year in Washington since they have been represented at this post. The parties have usually been dinner parties, usually for men only, followed frequently by large and brilliant receptions. The old embassy, which is lovingly remembered by several generations of Washingtonians, was always in gala attire, particularly for the birthday of the beloved Queen Victoria on May 24. But this is the first time the celebration of the ruler has taken the form of an al fresco party, and it is particularly alluring to the fortunate who have been bidden to this first one in the new home. Nothing can be more lovely than an English garden in the spring and summer, and while the one which is an important part of the embassy is still young, it gives promise of what an adorable spot it will be twenty or thirty years hence.

COURT mourning being observed for the late President of France upset the social schedules of scores of hosts and hostesses last week, and will, indeed, interfere with them for some days yet. Scarcely an embassy of legation in the city but that has postponed one or more festivities, or canceled them.

Mrs. Hoover took the keenest delight in the festivities yesterday in Wooster, Ohio, which her great-great-grandfather, William Henry, was one of three men to found and incorporate, 125 years ago. Mrs. Hoover has been in Wooster many times searching records and looking up various family matters, and she has among her choice possessions the side saddle her great-grandmother used, and the watch of her grandfather, the first one with a covered case ever seen in Wooster. It has, etched upon the lid, a drawing of the first steam engine to run into Wooster, over the Pennsylvania railroad. He was a small boy on that day and went out to see it, then had his picture taken, a copy of which Mrs. Hoover presented some time ago, to the Wooster College Museum. The side saddle and the watch she has loaned to the museum, along with much valued history of the early days of the town, which grew in a short time to be the largest town between Pittsburgh and Fort Wayne, Ind., when Cleveland was just a little trading post. The history Mrs. Hoover has collected and loaned to the museum was used for much of the pageant given yesterday as the main feature of the celebration. It was very fitting that Lou Henry Hoover, the First Lady of the Land, should go back to Wooster yesterday as the guest of honor of this pageant, and then that she should hold a great reception in the Methodist church and shake hands with more people than Wooster had ever seen in its town before.

WOOSTER COLLEGE took this opportunity to have the First Lady as its guest of honor for its Color Day exercises. The Color Day queen was Miss Elma Sage, of Marion, Ohio, the late President Harding's home town. During these festivities the college bestowed upon Mrs. Hoover the not-much-known but very-much-coveted degree of "literarum humanitorium," which is only the second time this college has awarded this degree. Following these interesting exercises, Mrs. Hoover was the guest at luncheon of the trustees and the faculty of the college. In the afternoon Mrs. Hoover held the reception in the church and then took her train Eastward. Close beside her in these ceremonies was Mrs. Wilson Compton, whose husband and two children went out to Wooster with Mrs. Hoover in the presidential car, Mrs. Compton having preceded them. Mrs. Compton is the only woman among the trustees of the college. The first time they had a queen for "Color Day," Mrs. Compton, as a student at the college, was chosen. Famous Home to Be Opened to Public Soon

McLean Church Group Will Give Fete at "Salona" on Saturday.

Mrs. T. M. Corner is chairman of the committee in charge of the arrangements for the bicentennial celebration to be held by St. John's Episcopal Church, of McLean, Va., on next Saturday, when "Salona," one of the historic spots in the Old Dominion, will be thrown open to the public for the first time. Others on the committee are Mrs. H. S. Abell, Mrs. Walter Weaver, Mrs. J. K. Smoot and Miss Sallie Lewis Ball.

These ladies will wear colonial costumes which have been handed down for many generations. Old silk wedding dresses, trimmed with heirloom lace, and brocaded shawls will come from their hiding places to give color to the occasion. Old silver which belonged to a branch of the Washington family will be seen. Beautiful old quilts, china and glassware, 100 years old, will be on exhibition. You will see many other articles of interest—the old haircloth sofa and four-post bed, a curious wooden butter press, a hand-made rocking chair which has done duty for so many generations that its rockers have had to be reenforced.

"Salona," so named by its founders for an ancient castle in southern Italy, means "A place of great hospitality." Built in 1801 by Rev. William Maffit (Parson Maffit), it has played no unimportant part in the history of the Nation. When Dolly Madison, wife of President Madison, fled from Washington on the approach of the British, after the American disaster at Bladensburg, in August, 1814, it was at "Salona" she found a refuge and there remained for some time. It may be said that it was also the Capital of the Nation for a period as she was joined later by President Madison and members of his Cabinet who remained there during—and some time after—the burning of the Capital. "Salona" was at that time in the town of Langley but is now on the border of the more modern village of McLean.

Mrs. James E. Cogan, of Cleveland, Ohio, is a guest at the Shoreham during the convention of the Chist Child Society. She will visit her daughter, Miss Margaret Cogan, in New York before returning to her home.

Charity Fete Will Feature Tennis Stars

Col. and Mrs. Arthur O'Brien to Be Hosts at Affair on Wednesday.

The District's best tennis players and a Philadelphia champion will appear in exhibition matches at the charity fete to be held on Wednesday at Estabrook, the Rock Creek Park estate of Col. and Mrs. Arthur O'Brien.

The first competition will start at 4 p. m.

While the tennis will constitute but one feature of the variegated sports and entertainment program of the fete, it is expected to prove a strong attraction, as the ranking racquet wielders seldom are seen in action against one another so early in the season. The women's match will carry especial interest because Mrs. Stone is rated one of the ten best in the East, while her opponent has held championships in West Virginia, Maryland and parts of Pennsylvania outside her own bailiwick.

EMPHASIS ON ACCESSORIES RATHER THAN FROCKS SEEN AS ADDING TO VARIETY

For Sports

Wide shoulders are emphasized in this novelty knit spectator suit at the top. Red and white candy stripes form the trimming.

Military lines mark spectator sports suit of natural colored linen crash, shown below. The blouse is of fine linen and scarf is China blue.

Men's Shoes Brightened by Many Colors

Oxfords of Blue Kid for Fall Shown; Tie Effects in Mode for Women.

New York, May 14 (A.P.).—Men's shoes this fall will be more colorful than women's, it was shown by a model wardrobe displayed recently at the joint style conference of the shoe and leather industry.

This wardrobe, presented to Grover Whalen, who addressed the conference, contained eight pairs of shoes, including some blue kid oxfords.

Shoes for morning, afternoon, active sports, spectator sports and evening wear were in the group.

In the women's shoes, oxfords and tie effects will be most fashionable for street wear. Black and brown lightweight calf will be the general rule. Some navy blue kid also will be seen.

Unity and completeness of design with the costume will be the tendency of the feminine shoe wardrobe. This means the shoe must carry out the general effect of the costume and harmonize, rather than contrast sharply.

Heels on afternoon shoes show a tendency to become lower.

Soft suede shoes in pastel colors are shown for summer afternoon and evening wear. The fruit colors—citron, pistache, apricot, raspberry, strawberry and lime—are particularly lovely with printed frocks high-lighting any of these shades. Often bags of suede match the sandals.

Shoes of cloth in fancy weaves and embroidered effects combined with buckskin, colored kid, calf, or suede are shown for midsummer wear. One interesting pump was fashioned of eyelet-embroidered cloth and buckskin. Another pump featured tiny flowers in red and yellow with minute green leaves embroidered on a cream background.

Taffeta Ribbon

An effective use of wide taffeta ribbon was observed at the neck of an evening cape seen recently. This cape was made of geranium pink lace to match the frock with which it was worn and was a graceful loose-shoulder type with wide matching geranium pink taffeta ribbon twisted through the fabric all around the neckline and tied in a large, crisp bow in front.

Brown and White

New York, May 14 (A.P.).—Brown and white are a prominent color combination in several collections of summer sports frocks. One smart dress had white polka dots on a brown background. Brown and white stripes were observed as trimming effects on several new models.

Transformation

New York, May 14 (A.P.).—Blouses which may be transformed into evening jackets by certain adjustments of ties and sleeve treatments are as smart as they are practical. Most of these are made of soft, rough-surfaced crepe in pale colors.

Blue Feature Of Smart Set At Race Track

Longchamps' Crowds Wearing Matching Accessories, Varied by Red Note.

By ADELAIDE KERR.

LONGCHAMPS, May 14 (A.P.).—Fashion is as blue as a bluebird this spring, the smart crowds which throng the race track here on Sunday indicate.

Sapphire blue, royal, navy, gentian, flax, robin's egg and a new slate all are mingled as fashionable Parisians parade the grounds between races. Virtually every lady of fashion combines her particular shade of blue with another hue.

One sapphire blue wool frock worn with a coat of military lines was accepted with appliqued horseshoes of rust orange crepe. A coat of navy blue wool with big bishop sleeves was worn with a frock of red and white print and a little twisted turban to match. A royal blue coat was set off with a blue and white striped marocain frock and a chalk-white chip straw hat aslant over one ear.

Blue hats, bags, gloves and shoes generally are worn with the blue costumes, although several of the smartest women vary the process by wearing a bright red straw hat and scarf and carrying a red leather bag.

Green is the next popular shade in the color kaleidoscope at the race track. One blonde beauty appeared near the paddock recently wearing a little two-piece suit of emerald green diagonal wool with a pale yellow crepe blouse having a printed pattern of brown polo ponies dashing across it. Her hat and bag were of emerald green straw. A smart English woman wore a turban and coat of seagreen wool with a hoop scarf of mink, and another woman wore a skirt of hunter's green wool with a closefitting jacket of leaf green banded and collared in silver fox.

Despite the declaration of Parisian designers, that fox scarfs have slipped from the pinnacle of fashion, the silver fox reigns king of furs at this year's racing meets. Single and double pelt scarfs appear with tailleurs, dark coats are collared with the skins and jacket costumes are occasionally accented with them.

New straw hats are seen in coarse lacquered weaves, fine dull ones and exotic rough effects. White often is worn with navy or black costumes and red, blues and greens often are seen. The sailor with a flat little crown and a plain or rolling brim is chosen by more women than any other design. It usually is pitched on the extreme right side of the head.

A forehead veil is the newest thing to wear with it. It is chosen in a color to match the hair and worn at an exaggerated tilt across the forehead on an opposite angle to the tilt of the hat.

Slips' Importance In New Styles Told

Chicago, May 14 (A.P.).—There will be many a slip these next few months in the lives of most women.

The late spring and early summer dresses of sheer materials, from the new light woolen evening gowns to lacy weave sports dresses to dainty daytime frocks of voile, as well as many of the nontransparent silks, require slips.

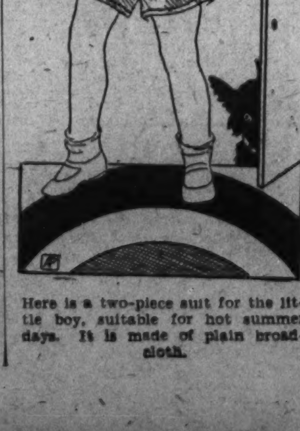
And these slips must be well-fitting if the popular svelte silhouette is to be achieved. No hole in the stocking can do more to mar that well-groomed appearance than an unsightly bulge in the underclothing. The new slips are generally cut on the bias with triangle and square inserts to give a smooth, form-fitting effect. And one boon of the bias-cut slip is that it stays anchored, doesn't creep up. Many of the new models have double bodice tops so they can do double duty. Some are severely tailored. Others are trimmed with lace and embroidery.

Long Puff Sleeves Feature of Dress

Paris, May 14 (A.P.).—"Dot prints," which have been growing in popularity, are used in varied mediums in Bruyere's summer collection.

A dot-printed emerald crepe evening bodice is combined with a white sinellic skirt. Coin dot printed crepe de chine is featured. And the dot prints make their appearance on many scarfs and belts. Afternoon dresses are designed with long puff sleeves. Sleeveless dresses go to the other extreme, and a compromise is effected with some epaulet and elbow sleeves. Specialized details of design include many diamond and diagonal seamings among the dresses, and a coat with the hip line extended by dart seams.

Play Suit



Here is a two-piece suit for the little boy, suitable for hot summer days. It is made of plain broadcloth.

On the Beach

The cotton beach pajamas above sugegst the military trend in the cut of the shoulders, button trimming and in the jacket and trouser seaming.

A wide flat-ribbed jersey fashions this one-piece separate skirted bathing suit, shown below. Its skirt also is used as a cape.

Dotted Frock Is Viewed as Real Smart

Polka-Fabric Dresses With Embroidery Effects are Characteristic.

Chicago, May 14 (A.P.).—This is a polka dot season.

Dots—pin size, coin size and large—are dotting the new collections from scarfs to evening frocks. In some of the new clothes the dots are solid colors, in others the dots are outlined, and in still others the dots are eyelet embroidery effects.

Very quaint and feminine are the new polka dot chiffon evening dresses. One of the specialty shops is displaying a distinctive evening frock which has red openwork embroidered dots and starched white chiffon. The neck is square, the skirt full and long and the shoulders covered with cape sleeves. It has a red ribbon belt fastened with a self-covered belt buckle.

Another smart shop is showing a white polka dot on navy blue chiffon. It is trimmed with rows of self-plaiting running horizontally on the skirt and over the shoulders.

Soft chiffon lends itself to shirring, which is one of the characteristics of the latest fashions. One rather dressy street frock, which was to be had in navy blue or black with polka dots, was shaped at the waist with shirring.

Dotted crepe frocks for spectator, sport and street will be smart this summer. In some the dots are of variegated sizes. In others the dots are in irregular patterns.

One model, which had white dots in irregular patterns on a black background was made particularly colorful, with a vivid red belt. One white polka dotted frock, which had a navy blue background, was modeled with white accessories—scarf, bag and gloves—indicating that the color of the dots will probably be the keynote for the accessories.

Distinctive Dinner Ensemble in Brown

Chicago, May 14 (A.P.).—When the window trimmers raised the curtain in the window of a smart Michigan boulevard shop this morning there was seen a distinctive dinner frock of a warm brown tulle. The dress was form fitting, with fullness below the knees. It had a tulle jacket that tied at the waist, and had puff sleeves. The only trimming was a brown ornament for a belt buckle. To go with it were shown evening sandals, hosiery in the same shade of brown and a close-fitting evening turban of brown.

Pumps' Red Bows

New York, May 14 (A.P.).—Red bows are trimming navy and black opera pumps. Navy suede operas feature red kid bows. A pair of soft black kid operas have neat little bows of red enamel.

Rigorously Tailored

Evening dresses having become simple to the point of suggesting the "tailor-made," it is no wonder that the inseparable jacket adopts the same mood and is now just as rigorously tailored. It is built on the tight lines of the mess jacket.

New Trends In Style for Graduation

Dresses of Cotton or Silk With Very Full Skirts Are Featured.

By DARE.

NEW YORK, May 14. — Dame Fashion has seemingly made up her mind to be most kind to the young graduate this season! For, quite without being obvious about it, she has styles and materials, colors and trimmings already in the mode which are so appropriate to graduation frocks that they seem to be especially concocted for the young graduate! In fact, older sister and mother can not help feeling a bit as though they were borrowing something from youth, wearing these things. Lovely cotton fabrics, the flowers and tucks and ruffles and pleats, the pastel shades and the youthful styles found in dressy summer frocks.

All appropriate to graduation!

Starting with Louise Boulanger and her huge, huge skirts on organdie frocks, the girl graduate can make a choice of appropriate frocks for her "big day." These dresses of Louise Boulanger are most picturesque, developed as you have already guessed in cotton or silk organdy. The fullness is achieved in out-of-the-ordinary ways—as, for instance, a skirt all tucked in wide tucks, the edges of each tuck overlapping the other and sewn down from the waist to the hips, and the fullness flaring out abruptly from there. And these frocks have narrow dark sashes, and are sometimes of flowered organdy.

Lanvin uses her special striped organdy for evening frocks, or very deliberate summer afternoon frocks of the garden party type. Chanel uses deep hems on her organdy frocks to make the skirts stand out.

Frock for Slender Girl.

Or, if our girl graduate is the slender and sophisticated type, she may choose a frock that is not bouffant as to skirt, with interesting sleeves that fit well down over the knuckles and extend to a few inches above the elbow—there to stop like long evening gloves! These sleeves will be of the same material as the gown, but tucked and ruffled and embroidered in the finest imaginable little touches.

That's what Paris thinks of organdy. Cotton organdy, silk organdy, or an occasional very delicately printed or flowered organdy, is decidedly in the fashion picture. Therefore, I suggest it as the most appropriate material for the graduation frock for the young lady of any age. Somehow, it is more youthful and lovelier than silk or crepe, and certainly newer.

If, however, the young lady has her heart set on a silken fabric, we can not deny her some of the lovely sheer crepes, or wool georgette. Taffeta is also chic. But I would be firm about satin—it is a bit ultra for a young lady now!

As to colors, all the pastel shades being the mode, little sister can indulge in whatever color she wishes, depending largely upon the decision of the class. If there is no color preference, then she might choose one of the new vivid blues, or black, in an organdy—and be decidedly in the mode and outstanding as well.

Trimmings are youthful and charming on this type of frock. Ruffled and beruffled—but with ruffles full, yet not so very wide—an inch ruffle is smarter than a 2-inch one, as it were. And pleats. But the wise mamma will not indulge in pleats unless she is quite prepared for the laundry and cleaner's bills to follow—since she can please her darling quite as well with tucks and ruffles and other trimmings that are less expensive in upkeep. Pleats of all types are chic—if one wishes them.

Discreet Lace Trimming.

Lace trimming for the graduation frock must be very discreet. Only in tiny, fine edgings, or wee ruffles. Unless it be a whole fichu or capelet of lace, and very good lace. Or unless the whole dress is of lace, which is also stylish and not impractical—since a lace frock can be much worn after graduation.

And every letter from a girl about to graduate asks me of skirt lengths! Well, the answer is not very helpful. Because it has to depend largely upon the type of dress you select. If you are in a bouffant organdy, then length is correct. But if not, this is long, and your skirt must not stop far below the calf. Rather let me say that skirt lengths have to be regulated according to types of dresses and the age of the wearer—and allow me to be more precise about waistlines.

For waistlines are either at the natural waist or higher, and there is no question about that. While sleeves can range from no sleeves to tiny puffs, and go on down to the wrists, stopping wherever you wish your sleeve to stop and wherever it is the most becoming—and be of any tightness or size you desire.

Chic Stripes Add Original Note in Dress

Lingerie and Bathing Suits Also Brightened Greatly by Slantwise Designs.

By VYLLA POE WILSON.

THE flaunting chic of the new dots and stripes and their dash of contrast gives emphasis to the demand for originality in clothes this spring.

Even the most conservative of women have adopted the smart new striped effect, stripes that do not always go up and down by any means, but go across or slantwise.

This fad for lines has not only invaded the world of dresses, gowns, wraps and blouses but the most ultra-modern lingerie is of the striped material from which many of the filmy under garments are made.

Just to show that variety is the spice of fashion, the modistes have reversed the usual order and instead of having plain silk jackets and little Eton coats with striped dresses, they have gay little striped coats with plain dresses. Of course, the plaid silk jackets and the Roman stripes are also very much in the vogue at present.

The polka dots and pin dots and larger coin dots also have their places in the fashion sun. Some of the dresses of dark material with white dots are made in coat effect, with little vestees and blouses of the design reversed on a white background and dark dots.

Bathing Suit Styles.

The bathing suits, which are occupying the minds of many of the women and girls who will travel to summer resorts in a few weeks, are at their smartest if the material has a stripe or dot in it. Of course, even the most daring will agree that a striped bathing suit must be chosen with rare discrimination, and only after careful trying on. Some women cling to their plain colored bathing suits and indulge their fancy for the fad for stripes and dots in beach pajamas and coats worn with their suits.

Mrs. Hoover had on a luncheon ensemble suit of blue silk, with a striped silk blouse to match. Her hat of shining blue straw is trimmed with satin ribbon.

Mrs. Edward Everett Gann also has a blue ensemble suit, with which she wears a blue hat and soft blue and white striped blouse. She wears a cross fox fur.

Representative Edith Nourse Rogers is wearing a smart tailored suit of black and gray cloth, with a collar of soft gray and black striped fur. With this she wears a small black straw hat turned up in the back and finished with gray flowers.

Representative Owen's Dress.

Representative Ruth Bryan Owen is wearing a dress of black chiffon, with a black silk coat with a high collar of gray fur. Her hat is of black straw.

Baroness von Scheen, who has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Harold Walker, had on at a luncheon a dress of black crepe, silk-faced in white chiffon, with a low-draped tied collar. With this she wore a black coat with a high collar and a closely fitted black straw hat.

Mme. Debuchi, wife of the Japanese Ambassador, has a suit of grayish blue silk, made with a very short jacket and flared skirt. With this she wears a flat crown blue sailor hat. At a dinner party Mme. Debuchi wore a dress of emerald green chiffon, made with flounces and a slight train and cowl neckline.

Miss Mary Randolph is wearing a coat suit of soft black cloth, with a silver stripe in it. With this she wears a small black straw hat turned up in the back and a sable neckpiece.

Miss Anne Randolph has a suit of gray tweed made with a three-quarter length coat and a plain skirt, with which she wears a gray satin blouse. Her hat is a small one of black straw and she wears a fur scarf.

Mrs. Henry Suydam had on at a luncheon a dress of black crepe de chine made in surplice effect. With this she wears a black coat and a small black hat.

Is Wearing Coat Suit.

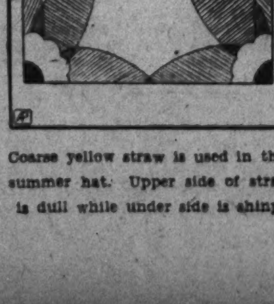
Mrs. Eugene Vidal has a coat suit of black crepe de chine with which she wears a white blouse with a draped collar. Her hat is a black straw one with a shallow round crown and a narrow brim.

Mrs. English-Gordon wore at one of the luncheons of last week an ensemble costume of dark blue silk, with a smart blue and white striped blouse. With this she wore a blue straw hat.

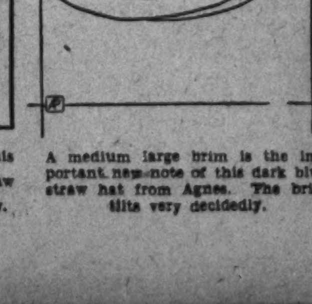
Miss Polly Foote is wearing a dress of blue crepe de chine dotted in white. With this she wears a short jacket of navy blue silk and a small navy blue hat.

Miss Marbury Beall was seen at one of the out-of-door events in a dress of blue and white striped wool with a blue wool coat with a collar buttoned up high. With this she wore a blue beret.

Two Spring Models in Straws



Coarse yellow straw is used in this summer hat. Upper side of straw is dull while under side is shiny.



A medium large brim is the important new note of this dark blue straw hat. The brim tilts very decidedly.

Summer Frocks

Silk muslin having a soft gray background and covered with pink roses, fashions the summer evening frock shown above. A crushable self-tie patent leather belt in red smartly complements the white crepe de chine dress below. The trimming is red.

Brides Seeking New Wedding Card Fashions

Much Smaller Invitation Is Not Folded; Old English Type Is Passe.

Chicago, May 14 (A.P.).—As summer approaches, stationers find their sample books of wedding invitations and announcements much thumbed by prospective brides in search of the correct and the latest way of letting the world know another bark is being floated on the sea of matrimony.

Very new and very correct, according to a Michigan boulevard stationer who has engraved these momentous notes for many of Chicago's most socially prominent families, are wedding invitations and announcements much smaller than the old familiar style that folded in the middle.

These new ones are 4½ by 6 inches. The double sheets, as customary, have a parchment-like finish in white or ivory. They are inserted into an enveloped without being folded after the manner of the older style. Two envelopes are used.

The most popular styles of engraving are shaded antique roman, shaded modified roman, English script, cathedral text, Tudor and Castilian. Old English; while it is still used, has passed out of popular favor as being too difficult to decipher in these busy days.

The invitations or announcements are generally paneled It is good form for the bride to use her family coat of arms if it is plainly embossed without color or gilt.

The rush and hurry of modern times have made correct another form. The busy bride-to-be, who receives many presents on the eve of the wedding, can acknowledge receipt by a simple engraved card, reading something like this, "Miss Mary Smith acknowledges receipt of your gift, and will take pleasure in writing a personal note of appreciation later." This is followed as soon as possible by the personal note.

Dachshund Motif

New York, May 14 (A.P.).—Dachshunds are replacing scotties and wirehaired terriers as the decorative motif of some of the newest costume accessories.

Some of the dachshunds are red, some green, but they are of the same longbodied, droll breed as the originals. They stretch themselves out above the frame of the bag and form the smartest handles.

Velveteen Coats

New York, May 14 (A.P.).—Black velveteen is used frequently this season for dress coats, both formal and informal. A particularly handsome evening coat is made of velveteen, tailored man fashion, but with tricky effects of the sleeves, and infastening, to make it utterly feminine.

Odd Belt Fastener

New York, May 14 (A.P.).—One of the neatest tricks of the season is a belt which closes with a sliding fastener of silver. When closed the fastener resembles an arrow as straight as Cupid's.

Difference Supplied by Several Hats

Collar-and-Cuff Sets, Wide Belts and Scarfs Give Varied Charm.

By ELEANOR GUNN.

NEW YORK, May 14.—Giving credit where credit is due, Fashion does seem to be doing what she can to simplify our clothes at this time.

By accenting the importance of accessories, she makes it possible for one to achieve variety without having to resort to complete changes of costume.

That women are spending more money on hats and accessories and are curtailing the number of their dresses, coats and suits seems to be the conclusion reached by those who make a study of this sort of thing.

Latest Accessories Listed.

Detachable collar-and-cuff sets, some buttoning smartly to the frock or being held by ornamental clips; wide ribbons in assorted colors and designs, bowed or knotted; scarfs, both wool and silk; fur neckpieces; a variety in hand-bags and belts, and, above all, a varied assortment of hats, adequately compensate for any depletion in the number of one's dresses.

Women seem to have settled on white gloves for town, but are unsettled, or rather not of one mind, about stockings. Mesh or plain, is the big question. It may be answered satisfactorily either way. There is also a much wider color range in stockings than formerly.

The boutonniere is another important consideration by day, and flowers in one form or another by night. White flowers lead in favor. One may buy massed flowers mounted on a band—just the thing to outline one's decolletage or to rim one's armholes.

Fabrics Stressed in Dress.

Dresses themselves, taken by and large, are much simpler and seem to make more of a point of fabric than of any innovation in form. Paris wavers between the snug little fur collarette and the fabric scarf as an accompaniment to the coat-dress, a type held in high esteem.

Hats are still inclined to fit the head closely, but not entirely at the expense of brims. Trimmings are sometimes flattened to the hat, but not always. Tiny wings jut out or up, and ribbon asserts itself, as it should, since it is still the most approved trimming of the season.

If you want to be lucky, have a bit of wood about you—that's Lyolene's latest prescription both for luck and for chic.

Flowers Are Worn On Blue Dress Coat

New York, May 14 (A.P.).—Lilacs, violets and sweet peas are worn on dress coats of blue, or black, this spring.

For evening, flowers deepen into pastel tones, delicate rose, blue, yellow, lavender or green, and the larger they are the smarter the effect.

An easy way to freshen last season's formal gown is by adding a lei of flowers about the decolletage, or a girdle of flowers about the waist. Epaulets of chiffon, or organdie flowers, or little sleeves entirely made of blossoms are effective and new.

New Modes Noticed On Avenue Stroll

New York, May 14 (A.P.).—Eyed on the avenue: Ivory clips to match the new ivory necklaces, earrings, bracelets and bead bags; children's sun suits piped in red or bue, with hardly any top at all, just straps over the shoulders; long sleeved sports frocks with mannish tailleur, boasting breast and hip pockets; dress and jacket ensembles of raspberry, blue, brown or green and white printed handkerchief linen; pique hats matching the color and fabric of the frock.

Organdie Cuff Set

An organdie collar and cuff set, with extensions over the shoulder in epaulet fashion and a wide V-neckline, offers a novel way in which to transform the silhouette of a dark frock. The epaulets are made wide enough so that they project beyond the upper arm and widen the shoulder line most effectively.

Dainty Miss

Smocking and fabric in contrasting color trim this dainty dotted Swiss frock for Miss 1 to 8.

For the Street

Width is obtained in the shoulders of the orange blouse shown above by outlining them with large brown buttons which match the skirt in color. Durene and rayon tweedy mesh make the skirt and trim the jersey blouse of the spring costume below. It is cut on straight lines.

Small Capes Now Popular In Ensembles

Patou Features Pansy Velvet Coats for Evening Wear; Bolero Suits Shown.

Paris, May 14 (A.P.).—Ensembles for all the day's events fill the summer collection of Patou.

Ensembles for informal day wear are of print, with short tie jackets. For the street costume a black crepe coat is worn over the print dress.

Sports wear uses for ensembles coarse jersey skirts and jackets, with fancy knit blouses and some wool plaids. Many bolero suits are shown, and Patou uses some suspender details.

Matching small capes are worn with afternoon dresses. The capes are also fashionable for evening.

Pansy velvet is featured by Patou for evening capes and coats. The capes are short. A three-piece evening ensemble uses both hip jacket and shoulder cape with the dress.

A new feature is the velvet girdle, matching the evening jacket. Contrasting evening belts have general popularity. Another detail is the use of smocking in evening coats.

Wide lace shoulder straps are sponsored by Patou as a variation of the summer lace dresses. Other evening materials include multicolor prints in taffeta and chiffon and velvet brocaded chiffon.

A white silk cocktail dress with a matching bolero forms an ensemble of distinction. A costume of similar style is shown in black moire.

Handkerchief print scarfs, folded triangularly, form a colorful accessory. Silver fox is used for scarfs and trims.

Purple, pansy and red are used in striking evening dresses. For daytime Patou favors black, white and beige.

Sleeves Are Smart

New York, May 14 (A.P.).—Most of the smartest evening gowns this summer will have sleeves or shoulder coverings at least, but daytime frocks are generally sleeveless. Silk jersey, pique, printed linens and lacy cotton weaves in many instances merely feature straps over the shoulder. Some have cape effects. Several new evening models have full sleeves reaching to the elbow.

Two-Fabric Idea

An expression of the two-fabric idea is found in the posing of embroidered organdie over flower-printed taffeta. Plain colored taffeta is frequently used for the slip of sheer cotton frocks, especially in bridesmaids' types, where the color of the slip is repeated in ribbon sash.

New Length Skirts

The ankle is a gauge of skirt lengths. For summer the formal afternoon dress and the informal evening dress are hovering around a new length—hitting the ankle bone square in the longest version, but also in a great many models going up 1 or 2 inches.

Clubs' Parley Will Discuss Rum Question

Little Chance of 3,000,000 Women Seeing Repeal However Is Seen.

By VYLLA POE WILSON.

Another round of the battle royal which will be carried on by women this summer with the political conventions as the firing line will be fought in June when the biennial convention of the General Federation of Women's Clubs will be in session in Seattle, Wash.

While the federation has always put itself on record as being against any amendment to the eighteenth amendment, and have declared against any of the bills calling for repeal of it, there are in the clubs 3,000,000 clubwomen of the Nation, members who are working for repeal. It is very doubtful if these "wets" within the "dry" ranks of the federation will be able to make any more headway than the "wets" did at the recent meetings of the women's patriotic organizations in Washington. But they will be in attendance at the biennial and, although they may not be able to inject a "wet" note in the dry platform of the federation, they will be able to discuss and present their views where the delegates gather for teas and social meetings between sessions.

A rallying call has been sent out from the headquarters of many women's organizations to their members throughout the country to cooperate with the local health departments in the Nation-wide campaign against disease. Many of the organizations are warning their members against false ideas of national and State and community economy which would affect school health service, health education, child clinics and other health clinics.

Mrs. Saidie Orr Dunbar, chairman of the department of public welfare of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, said recently:

"Economy in public spending is a strict necessity at the present time, but a distinction must be made between reasonable public economy and that economy which cuts to the quick the tried resources of a civilized community.

"An example of false economy is one that occurred in a city of 800,000 population a short time ago. The city fathers made such drastic cuts in the public health appropriation that it was necessary to greatly reduce the staff of health workers who were improving the general health of their fellow citizens. This meant the loss of 18 physicians, one of them a child specialist, four school physicians and others who were seeking to control communicable disease, and eighteen public health nurses.

"The need for public health protection even in this enlightened age," Mrs. Dunbar continued, "is not fully comprehended. The health of its school children is one of the important assets of any community. Constant care is the only way that this asset can be conserved. Great results have been achieved in the fight against tuberculosis but the work must be continued. To slacken in this effort may mean greatly increased expense to the community later.

"Therefore I urge all club members and women citizens generally to stand back of their health departments and see that needed funds are given them to carry on the valuable work they have been doing."

Grant me the charm of loving and giving
Of all life the greatest art.
Oh, for the gift of feeling,
When extending the helping hand,
To reach out in grace,
Put myself in your place,
With great power to understand.
Just to live simply and purely,
With no thought for self or fame,
And be one who knows,
When day draws to a close,
He has truly not lived in vain.

English Art Is Discussed By Delphians

Mrs. B. F. Bryan Is Leader of Program of National Capital Chapter.

The National Capital Chapter of the Delphian Society held its regular meeting Wednesday in Jelleff's Little Theater, the president, Mrs. T. F. Law, presiding. Guests present were Mrs. Wetsell, Mrs. Hewitt, Mrs. Welborn, Mrs. C. M. Jansky, of Columbia Chapter; Mrs. George Dewey and Mrs. Bernhardt, national field secretary.

Mrs. B. F. Bryan led the literary program on "English Painting." The topic, "Development of Art in England," was presented by Mrs. Ethel G. Carpenter. England was the last of the great countries to develop art because of her many wars and because of the natural reserve of the people. "Hogarth's Work" was discussed by Mrs. P. M. Chichester. Hogarth has been called the "father of English painting." It was he who emancipated English art from the craze for "old masters." Hogarth's cartoons and satirical subjects preserve for all time the crudities and hypocrisies of the age. His picture, "Marriage a la Mode," was exhibited and discussed by Mrs. Ethel Erickson. "Cunningham's Estimate of Hogarth" was given by Mrs. A. J. Maxwell.

Mrs. O. A. Bergren gave a very comprehensive and interesting talk on the life and works of Sir Joshua Reynolds, the great English portraitist. He was very popular, his home being the rendezvous for many of the noted men of the day. He became the first president of the Royal Academy of London, founded in 1769. Reynolds was the first to treat children on canvas as children and not as little men and women. His pictures, "Mrs. Siddons as the Tragic Muse," "Portrait of Admiral Keppel," and "The Strawberry Girl," were exhibited and discussed by Mrs. C. M. Godfrey.

The topic, "Gainsborough and Lesser Portraitists," was presented by Mrs. Edward Stevens. Gainsborough has been called the most English of English artists, because he owed little to foreign artists and nothing to contemporary artists. He was largely self-taught and his style was his own. He is at his best in the full-length portraits, and many were in three-quarters length. The most familiar of his works are "The Blue Boy," a beautiful reproduction of which Mrs. Bergren exhibited. Another extraordinary work, "The Morning Walk," was exhibited and discussed by Mrs. Ione M. Knowlton, as was "The Market Cart." "Landscape Painters Before Turner" was discussed by Mrs. J. B. Hartley. She presented for contrast, a few pictures by earlier foreign artists, beginning with Giotto, then some from the Flemish, Dutch, French and early English schools. The first great English landscape artist was John Constable. His pictures, "The Corn Field" and "The Hay Wain," were exhibited and discussed by Mrs. L. W. Francis. Mrs. A. S. Wolf discussed two landscapes by Wilson, "Landscape With Bathers" and "Near Hingham, Norfolk." Mrs. T. A. Huntley gave a very interesting account of the life and works of Turner, the greatest landscape painter the world has known. His methods were revolutionary. Little has been discovered since his time that he did not anticipate and test out. His pictures, "The Rising Sun Through Vapor," "The Fighting Temeraire" and "Ulysses Deriding Polypheum," were discussed by Mrs. Reta V. Maybee.

A summary of the lesson was given by the president, Mrs. Law. Up until the eighteenth century art in England had come from visiting artists. Hogarth was the man who changed conditions. He rebelled aginst conventional painting and made art national. Reynolds' work was intellectual and very popular. Gainsborough learned from Van Dyck the secret of portraying the beauty of women. Constable may be called the inventor of natural landscapes. Turner was a painter who enshrined light. Painters had now mastered the technique of the human body. Leonardo began it by catching human personality, reaching perfection in Rembrandt.

Current events were presented by Mrs. J. E. Kiernan.

The leader for the next meeting, May 25, will be Mrs. R. M. Kelley.

Woodridge Book

The Woodridge Book Club held its regular monthly meeting May 10, in the Woodridge Branch Library, with Mrs. J. L. Knopp as hostess. The new president, Mrs. O. E. Meinzer, presided. The meeting was opened by the chaplain, Mrs. James May.

The new members of the standing committee were announced, and brief but comprehensive reviews of a number of new books were given. A report of the last meeting of the Federation of Women's Clubs was given, following which the club voted to purchase an appropriate marker for one of the memorial trees planted in Washington. It was also voted to make more bedside bags for hospital patients. After the short business meeting a most interesting program consisting of reviews of the following books was given:

Women in Russia.

"The Education of a Princess" (by Marie, Grand Duchess of Russia), Mrs. W. B. Sullivan.

"The Road to the Grey Pamir (by Anne Louise Strong), Mrs. O. E. Meinzer.

"Theater Street (by Tamara Karsavina), Mrs. Everett Dix.

The chairman of the advisory board submitted amendments to the by-laws to be acted upon at the next meeting. Mrs. W. W. Stockberger, chairman of this year's program committee, announced the speaker for the following meeting—Mrs. Rose Gouveneur Hoes.

The chapter accepted the invitation to visit the U. S. S. Constitution June 9, at 2 p. m., which was extended by the officers of the historic craft.

Following the business session the paper was read by Mrs. W. F. Foster, her subject being "The Mother of Washington." Refreshments were served by the hostess and assisting hostesses, Mrs. Milton H. Fohrman, Miss Emma Sirrine, Mrs. W. W. Stockberger, and Miss Jessie O. Elting.

What Today Means to You

By MARY BLAKE

"TAURUS."

If May 15 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 7:30 a. m. to 9 a. m., from 2 p. m. to 3:30 p. m., and from 8 p. m. to 9:15 p. m. The danger periods are from noon to 1:20 p. m., and from 6 p. m. to 7:30 p. m.

It would be advisable to forsake all thoughts of business on Sunday, May 15, as the planets are not auspiciously placed for worldly affairs. Influences are favorable for the pursuing of spiritual participations, gab-fests, or simple home pleasures, according to the customs and pleasure of the individual.

Children born on this May 15 will have cautious natures and will take their responsibilities very seriously. They will tend to brood over their misfortunes, and will be sensitive to criticisms. Unless assigned to a leading part, they soon lose interest in anything.

Born on May 15, you have a slow, ponderous nature, combined with a capacity for sustained effort. Your disposition is too lymphatic to be subject to irritation, and it takes a severe prick to get underneath your skin. You are also incapable of knowing that you are ever the cause of irritation in others—your very complacency is sometimes irksome to one of a more mercurial temperament. Your jokes or smiles are disarming to those who try to pick a quarrel with you, and you easily come out the victor in a would-be fight.

As a man you should succeed as a tiller of soil, as a horticulturist, builder and contractor, a scientific forester, or some line of mechanical work. As a woman, you are fitted for home economics, applied in the field of your own home, nursing, hospital, laboratory work, or some form of welfare work. You are not afraid to roll up your sleeves and dig, and although a plodder, are a cheerful one. You are never too busy to talk, or too tired to refrain from it. When you like a person to whom you are speaking, you have a tendency to become too voluble, and "spill the beans" when you should be careful. "Thy friend has a friend, and thy friend's friend has a friend; be discreet," is a quotation which you should memorize. The parental instinct is strong within you, and a marriage without children would be apt to end on the rocks.

Successful people born on May 15:

Samuel Walker Beyer, geologist.

Matheson Lang, movie actor.

Levi Lincoln, first U. S. Attorney-General and Governor of Massachusetts.

Jacob Thompson, Secretary of the Interior under Buchanan.

Thomas Lake Harris, founder of "Brotherhood of New Life."

CHARLES H. JACKSON, JR., president of senior classes at George Washington University.

American University.

Bringing to American University its highest honors in debates, a chapter of Delta Sigma Rho, the oldest honorary forensic fraternity, will be installed next Saturday afternoon at Hurst Hall on the college campus, with national officers of the society officiating.

Dr. Henry Le Ewbank, of the University of Wisconsin, national president, will conduct the ceremony, assisted by the national vice president and treasurer, Gilbert L. Hall, of the George Washington University Law School, and National Secretary Frank S. Smith, of this city. Charter members will be: Yule Fisher, Charlotte Magee, Robert Marcus, Earl Masincup, Arthur Murphy and Max Tucker. They were elected by the fraternity committee of A. U., consisting of Dr. George B. Woods, dean of the college; Mrs. Hilda Minder French and the debates coach, Donald Sherbondy.

The annual Shakespeare show of the American University Dramatic Club, "Macbeth," will be presented next Thursday and Friday nights at the auditorium on the campus. Thursday night will be especially for high school students, and Friday for the public. The large cast has been in rehearsal for many weeks, under direction of Will Hutchins, professor of art, who established the Shakespeare tradition on the campus.

Robert Marcus, of Chicago, a prominent debater, has been elected president of the students' association and of the student council for next year.

Columbia Technical School.

The following officers have been elected by Beta Chapter of the Delta Tau Gamma Sorority of the Columbia Technical School, at 1319 F street northwest: P. J. Leverone and Mrs. J. C. Mulford, honorary presidents; Mrs. S. P. Garden, president; Mrs. E. Patton, vice president; Miss Notter, executive secretary; Miss Delaney, social secretary; Miss B. Osgood, treasurer; Miss G. Lifford, sergeant at arms.

Plans are being made for a dinner dance to be held at the Shoreham Hotel. The membership of Beta Chapter of the sorority has been limited to 26, and there is already a long waiting list of applicants.

Beta Chapter of Delta Tau Gamma will sponsor the Columbia "Tech" graduation exercises and dance to be held in the Spanish gardens and the hall of nations of the Washington Hotel on June 2.

The following were elected chairmen of standing committees: Employment, Miss L. Deibler; refreshments, Miss M. Delaney; publicity, Miss B. Osgood; social, Miss M. Delaney; motto and flower, Miss L. Deibler; initiation, Miss G. Lifford.

Washington College of Law.

The freshman class of Washington College of Law will hold its gold medal contest next Saturday evening, May 21, to decide the debating championship of the year. The subject is, "Resolved, That the protocols in respect to the World Court now before the Senate should be accepted by the United States without further reservations."

The champion teams which will participate will be composed of David T. Burgh, Norma Windsor and John V. Hughes in the affirmative, and Leigh R. Sanford, Veronica A. Dodd and John E. Lady in the negative. The freshmen have planned a gala dance in honor of the victors immediately following the debate. Alton E. Wise, chairman of the committee, is in charge, with Lorena H. Ellis, Fasig Wood and Dorothy L. Wolff assisting.

The eighty-second birthday of the honorary dean of the Washington College of Law, Dr. Ellen Spencer Mussey, was celebrated on Friday evening by a dinner in her honor held at the Women's City Club.

Martin A. Morrison, former member of Congress and chairman of the congressional committee on patents, and now assistant chief counsel of the Federal Trade Commission, will deliver several special lectures at the college this week on the legal and economic functions of the Federal Trade Commission and the procedure before the commission.

The Freshman Class of the Evening Division last week elected officers for next year when it will be the Junior Class. The newly elected officers who will take over their duties at the close of the school year are Norma Windsor, president; Leigh R. Sanford, vice president; Lucy R. Scott, recording secretary; Charles H. Purcell, treasurer; John E. Wicker, sergeant-at-arms, and the executive committee, Anna B. Murphy, Edward N. Bodholdt and Lorena H. Ellis.

Arlington Hall.

The annual Senior Class play directed by Miss Anne Nowell, which is this year "The First Mrs. Fraser," will be presented at the college on May 19. The cast is as follows: Miss Frances Virginia Hornibrook, supported by Miss Sara Bare, Miss Barbara Casper, Miss Helen Biggs, Miss Falah Campbell, Miss Mary Campbell, Miss Freda Sutherland and Miss Janet Mann.

Delta Psi Omega pledges who are: Miss Freda Sutherland, Miss Ellen Brown, Miss Jo Carter, Miss Virginia Sebastian, Miss Neil West and Miss Helen Kinslow will be initiated into this honorary dramatic national fraternity on Saturday, May 14.

American University.

Plans for holding here in Washington next February a League of Nations conference with sessions modeled after the bodies of the league were heard with much interest and personal approval yesterday by Mrs. Woodrow Wilson at a luncheon at the Cosmos Club, sponsored by American University Graduate School.

Mrs. Wilson made a brief and informal talk at the conclusion of the luncheon, expressing her "enthusiasm" for the project and her interest in the subject in which her famous husband took so large a part.

The conference next February 20 to 26 will be set up to represent the bodies of the League of Nations, it was explained by Miss Frederika Critchett, vice chairman of the organization committee, who said that promises of cooperation had already been received from many educational institutions and persons interested.

A BLOSSOMING SCREEN CAREER, TAXES AND A CURB ON GENIUS

By NELSON B. BELL

THERE is rapidly coming to fullest fruition a screen career which, more than anything else, demonstrates the power of accomplishment that lies in a grim determination to succeed.

Not too many years ago there was a comely and energetic dancer known by the name of Le Seuer, whose talents were devoted to the ensemble ebulliences of musical comedy, who is reputed upon a certain occasion to have delivered herself of a dressing-room ultimatum expressive of a supreme willingness to make unusual sacrifices and perform extraordinary services in order to gain a chance in Hollywood. The idea grew until it finally translated itself into action and Miss Le Seuer found herself by some magic inside the Tibetan walls of one of the West Coast's most sacred precincts, where the high priests of the cinema at once decided that Le Seuer was a bit of nomenclature that lent itself with poor grace to easy remembrance, simple pronunciation and electric lights. This last, at the moment, was a purely prophetic vision.

For Miss Le Seuer, at the period of her induction into the intricacies of motion picture making, as an actress was not so much. There were those with far-seeing eyes on the lot, however, and a contest was speedily put in motion whereby the picture-going public itself was to be intrusted with the vital function of choosing a suitable name for a young woman whose career was still shrouded in obscurity.

The prize money in due course was allotted to the prescient individual who suggested Joan Crawford as the likeliest name for this embryonic and unknown star.

Miss Crawford's early endeavors, as I recall them, while agreeable enough, could hardly be catalogued among the overnight phenomena in which Hollywood as a city of miracles has so generously abounded.

There was a long hill stretching away in front of Miss Crawford, of which, at last, she has almost reached the crest.

* * * *

This rise of Joan Crawford to the heights has been marked by no quick catapulting to the mountain-tops. It has been a gradual and slow ascent, each step forward upon a sure footing, achieved by dint of a natural endowment for the task in hand, of course, but more particularly by perseverance, hard work and a will to win. The assumption in private life of the fabulous magic lantern name of Fairbanks, I think, has had no bearing whatsoever upon the early Crawford career, except as her marriage to Douglas, jr., may have revealed a broader horizon upon which an actress might contemplate something more of the fullness of living than formerly.

* * * *

WHILE Miss Crawford's stellar efforts may not even yet have taken on the international importance that attaches to the releases of the Garbos, the Chattertons, the Dietrichs or even the Shearers, a point has been reached where the Crawford vehicles never fail to be interesting and where their star is able to mould her art into the depiction of definite and often distinguished personalities.

This is a circumstance that evidently has not escaped the keen perception of the executives under whose guidance Miss Crawford has reached her present eminence. The proof of this is not far to seek.

A cursory glance at the film bills on view in the downtown, first-run cathedrals of the cinema will reveal that under the new policies inaugurated Friday last on F street, Loew's, Inc., is content to rely upon the drawing power of this gifted young artiste in two of its theaters simultaneously. I do not mean to say that Joan Crawford is by any means the main box office reliance of "Grand Hotel," at the Columbia, or that she does not fairly share honors with Robert Montgomery in "Letty Lynton," at the Palace, but neither can there be any gainsaying that the name of Joan Crawford is a conspicuous lure in each instance and that had she not a decisive appeal to a vast number of theatergoers she would not be permitted to set up opposition to herself as is currently being done.

It is her sponsors' acknowledgment, I take it, that Joan Crawford, even if she has not quite attained a place among the great, at least has demonstrated her right to be numbered among those preeminent artistes whom the public greatly likes.

* * * *

There seems to be, by the way, an odd unity of managerial viewpoint reflected in the bookings for the present week. In addition to Miss Crawford's repetitive activities, RKO-Keith's is wagering on the popularity of John Barrymore, also a conspicuous figure in "Grand Hotel," by presenting him for at least nine days in "State's Attorney," and the Earle, conscious, no doubt, of the potency of courtroom drama at the ticket wicket, offers Warren William in "The Mouthpiece," another drama of the law, said to be fashioned after the career of a famous Broadwayite, now deceased.

* * * *

BUT while the casual theater goer is diverting himself with these surface manifestations of a cherished form of entertainment, those concerned with the deeper interests of the motion picture industry find themselves confronted by graver perplexities.

The ubiquitous matter of taxes, like death and poor relations, it seems, is truly always with us.

Among the sources to which the Federal Government has turned in its quest for taxable receipts is the motion picture industry. The tax bill as it was passed by the House and is now under consideration by the Senate, if, indeed, it has not already been reported out by the time these matutinal Thursday observations find their way into Sabbath type, provides for an admission tax of 10 per cent on all price scales.

The makers of motion pictures and the theater owners, it is pointed out by one high in the councils of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, of which Will H. Hays is president, have brought many arguments to bear in an attempt to have this tax line lowered or to cause entire abandonment of the levy.

The proposed tax, say the movie men, is a charge upon the poor man's amusement; it is an increase in the cost of a commodity held to be particularly essential during times of depression and stress; it is a nuisance tax in that it draws revenue in nickels, dimes and pennies from the daily life of the man in the street.

The movie protagonists claim further, it is emphasied, that the tax is self-defeating, in that it will cost a large percentage of its total revenue to collect, and that it will greatly reduce attendance, the income of the theaters and the studios, thus diminishing the amounts of other taxes continuously paid by the units of the industry.

Already, it need not be kept secret, the balance sheets of the motion picture companies and of the theater owners are suffering from that attenuation of income commonly affecting the members of our national industrial body. They are making as frantic efforts as the Federal establishment itself to balance their budgets. So what?

* * * *

So, whatever may be the fate of any particular proposal for taxation, the Government would disclose a genuine and salutary sagacity not to place extra and avoidable burdens upon those industrial entities which it selects to assume major portions of the tax load.

* * * *

THEN there has been introduced into the House of Representatives HR 8877, a resolution authored by the Honorable Samuel Dickstein, member of Congress from New York, seeking to bring within the contract labor provisions of the immigration law alien actors, whether coming for permanent residence or for a temporary period, unless

"(1) he is of distinguished merit and ability as an actor; and

"(2) his professional engagements within the United States are of a character requiring superior talent and even then

"his admission to the United States shall be under such conditions as may be by regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Labor (including where deemed necessary the giving of bond with sufficient surety) to insure that at the termination of his contract he will depart voluntarily from the United States."

When this bill was reported out of committee it was accompanied by a four-page report in which

LEW AYRES IN SWIFT-MOVING RACKET PLAY

What is perhaps the finest screen production of its kind since "Broadway" is playing at the Rialto Theater, with Lew Ayres as its star.

The new production, made by Universal Pictures, from a great story by P. J. Wolfson and Allen Rivkin, is "Night World." It reveals in a highly interesting melodrama the swiftly moving replica of New York life, a complete inside on the cafe and night club racket. At the same time, it supplies Lew Ayres with one of the finest roles he has ever undertaken before the camera.

In support of Mr. Ayres are Mae Clarke, Boris Karloff (recalled for his splendid work in "Frankenstein;" Dorothy Revier, Russell Hopton, Bert Roach, Hedda Hopper, Huntley Gordon, Geneva Mitchell, and many other lesser players, who, under the direction of Hobart Henley, contribute to a screen drama that centers about the life of a man who was disgusted with living until he discovered he might be deprived of enjoying it.

The Rialto, in addition, offers the latest edition of Universal News, with Graham McNamee in his favorite reportorial role, and a list of selected shorter subjects, including a comedy.

Ten pictures in two years!

With such an active program, one would imagine Mr. Ayres a very busy young fellow—which, indeed, he is—with no time for outside interests. But that isn't the case. In fact, the opposite is true.

He is, to begin with, the best amateur astronomer in California, a noted chess player, an assiduous gardener, a sculptor, he plays a mean hand at bridge, rides horseback, shoots wild ducks, plays tennis, dabbles at chemistry, at which he is expert; is so expert with knives and throwing them he might enter a circus sideshow and make a fortune at the business—these are some of the Ayres accomplishments. And he practices them constantly.

NEWS SHOTS A HELP WHEN AN AID TO STYLE

Newsreel pictures of the amazing events which followed the assassination of Czar Nicholas of Russia were screened over and over again during production of "The World and the Flesh," in which Paramount stars George Bancroft as a Red, in order that historic events might be accurately re-created.

Four reels of actual scenes filmed during those days of the Communist revolution were projected on a screen at the Paramount studios so that Bancroft, the rest of the cast and the technicians might study and learn from them.

Under instructions issued several years ago by B. P. Schulberg, managing director of production, many reels and clippings from issues of Paramount News, the Pictorial and other scenic films have been indexed for reference in the studio's research department. Some footage 30 years old is in the collection.

The Russian footage shown was shot during the revolution and pictures soldiers, mobs, street scenes and fighting.

The casting, wardrobe and architectural departments selected scenes which best gave them the information needed for bringing back the correct atmosphere of that time.

WESLEY EDDY COMES HOME TO F STREET FOR TOUR OF DUTY

Loew's Fox Theater is now introducing its new policy of diversified picture presentation and a greater and more varied stage show offering with the movie "The Woman in Room 13" and Wesley Eddy, plus a stage show from the Capitol Theater in New York.

In "The Woman in Room 13" Elissa Landi is given one of the best vehicles she has had in her brief screen career. She plays the role of the mysterious lady of the title and, according to advance reports, handles it with skill.

The picture has a splendid supporting cast. The featured players include Neil Hamilton, Myrna Loy, Gilbert Roland, Ralph Bellamy and Walter Walker. It is a Fox production, was directed by Henry King and was adapted from the stage play by Samuel Shipman.

Much of the action is laid in nearby Baltimore and the play includes many scenes in the Maryland city. It deals with local politics there, but the scenes shift from one locale to another with swiftness and absorbing interest.

Wesley Eddy is holding forth from the Fox stage after an absence of more than a year from Washington. He is his same versatile self and as engaging as he was when he played an engagement of 72 consecutive weeks at Loew's Palace.

The stage show is "Blue Waves," and it features the great dancing team, Dolores, Eddy and Douglas, Serge Flash, the Runaway Four, the Phelps Twins and the Chester Hale Mermaids.

Phil Lampkin and his Fox Concert Orchestra have arranged a special presentation of "William Tell." This will be given at all performances.

A STRONG FILM AND A GROUP OF WORTHY VAUDEVILLE ACTS

With the First National dramatic hit of the season, "The Mouthpiece," featuring Warren William, as the screen attraction, and a vaudeville bill headed by the youthful Peter Higgins, the silver-voiced tenor of radio, screen and stage fame, the current program at Warner Bros.' Earle Theater is one of the bright spots on the Washington theatrical skyline this week.

"The Mouthpiece" tells a dynamic story of a lawyer whose smooth tongue was the mouthpiece with which he swayed juries, with which he set many a woman's heart afluttering, but which failed him when he tried to make the one girl of his heart believe he was on the level.

"The Mouthpiece" derives its title from the main character portrayed by Warren William. In this picture he proves himself one of the most talented actors of the screen. The adaptation was from a play by Frank J. Collins, based on the life of a famous New York character.

Sidney Fox, of "Strictly Dishonorable" fame, appears opposite William in the leading feminine role, while Aline MacMahon appears in the wisecracking comedy role. Guy Kibbee, William Janney, Ralph Ince and Noel Francis complete the cast.

The vaudeville activities are headed by Peter Higgins, youthful vaudeville, picture and radio star, whose marvelous tenor voice has made him popular with millions of listeners. Many will remember him as the "Voice of the Air" in a well-known weekly broadcast. His program will consist of the songs which proved to be the favorites of the radio audience. The bill also includes the Four Ortons, wire walkers, who intersperse laughs with thrills on the tight rope; Russell, Marconi and Jerry, presenting "Little Bits From Big Hits;" Betty Jane Cooper and the Lathrop Brothers, six educated feet in new dance ideas, and Maxine Doyle, mistress of ceremonies.

The screen program is completed by a diversified array of short-reel subjects, which include Burns and Allen, stage and radio comics, in "Oh, My Operation," a howling comedy; a cleverly executed song cartoon, "Bosko and Bruno;" a Newman Traveltalk, "Dear Old London," and the latest issue of the Universal Talking Newsreel.

Frank J. Collins, writer of the play from which "The Mouthpiece" was adapted, based his story on actual incidents occurring in the life of a notorious New York lawyer, now dead.

The late legal practitioner acquired fame because of the dramatic defenses of doubtful characters and his impassioned eloquence which so frequently influenced juries to find verdicts as he wished them to. He was famed for his brilliant legal mind, which enabled him to find innumerable loopholes in the law, thus permitting his clients to operate within the law.

He led a dissolute life, wasting it on bad associations and the combination of wine and women. His health became broken as a result of the profligate life he led. With the failing health he lost his fair weather friends, his money and his interest in defeating justice.

TWO STARS AT PALACE START A NEW POLICY

Joan Crawford, in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Letty Lynton," began the new policy at Loew's Palace Theater Friday. Commencing this week this picture house that has long ranked with the best in the Nation, goes on a straight movie presentation basis with reduced prices.

The new rates at the Palace are as follows: Week days and Saturdays, 11 a. m. to 5:30 p. m., 35 cents; boxes and loges, 50 cents; 5:30 to closing, 50 cents; boxes and loges, 70 cents; children, 35 cents; Sundays and holidays night prices will prevail.

"Letty Lynton" brings Robert Montgomery back to the screen with Miss Crawford again after a period of more than a year in a story that is the filmization of Marie Belloc Lowndes' novel. It is based on the problems faced by an heiress who played with men's loves until she found herself in a trap of her own setting.

Miss Crawford plays the dramatic heroine amid tropical South American resorts, the whirl of New York life and aboard a great liner in midocean. Montgomery is the "right man," who comes along just in time to save her from her own folly.

Among the film's high-powered episodes are the scene in which the girl attempts to sever relations with the ruthless South American, the sensational discovery of his death in a New York hotel and the main love episode of the picture, this with young Montgomery.

The stars are supported by a strong cast, which includes Nils Asther, Lewis Stone, May Robson, Louise Closser Hale, Emma Dunn and William Pawley. The movie was directed by Clarence Brown, who produced Miss Crawford's recent success—"Possessed," and other such box-office hits as "A Free Soul" and "Emma."

Miss Crawford's screen mother in "Letty Lynton" is one of the most famous women on the American stage. She is May Robson, who achieved an international reputation for her work in "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary," "Mother's Millions" and other plays. She was one of the foremost Frohman stars. She recently made her debut in talking pictures after refusing to join the films during their silent days.

"Letty Lynton" will be shown at the Palace for the entire week. No stage show accompanies the picture. Comedies, newsreels and short subjects are on the program, however.

"GRAND HOTEL" IS INDEED A GRAND FILM!

"Grand Hotel," the picture with the cast that reads like a Hollywood blue book, is now well under way at Loew's Columbia Theater, playing a "road show" engagement with all seats reserved.

This is the film story of Vicki Baum's sensational play, one which ran for months in New York as a legitimate production, and one that promises to go to even greater heights in its celluloid form.

The principals are Greta Garbo, John Barrymore, Joan Crawford, Wallace Beery, Lionel Barrymore, Lewis Stone and Jean Hersholt. Scores of other well-known screen actors and actresses have lesser roles.

"Grand Hotel," according to the people who produced it, is their "supreme endeavor," and promises to go far toward setting a new high mark for motion picture excellence. The presence of the all-star cast is not the only compelling feature of the play. The manner in which it is presented and filmed has much to do with its success.

Never before have Hollywood producers gone to so much trouble and employed so much detail in the making of a movie. Huge cranes, with cameras perched on their ends, were employed throughout the film, for often the story switches abruptly from one room or spot in the "Grand Hotel," to another, and then speeds swiftly back again. This enriches the action of the play no end and leads much to its effectiveness.

Seldom has a motion picture caused so much controversy as the current one, especially with regard to the matter of to which star the production really belongs. Garbo admirers can point to several instances where the production is indisputably hers.

And just as well can those who give their undivided applause to Joan Crawford claim the picture is hers, for she has several scenes in which she does some of the best acting the motion picture world has ever witnessed.

Likewise can the fans who cling to Lionel Barrymore call "Grand Hotel" his. One critic said that of the five most dramatic scenes in the film, four of them belonged to the elder Barrymore. John's work, of course, can not be challenged, and also it is easily one of the most difficult parts of the play.

"Grand Hotel" is showing twice daily at the Columbia and three times on Sunday. From the present attendance records during the first three days, the production will go into a second and possibly a third week.

BARRYMORE IS CONTINUED ON FIFTEENTH ST.

Having moved the opening day forward to Wednesday last, RKO-Keith's is continuing the presentation of the latest John Barrymore picture, "State's Attorney," through the current week.

The picture, which marks the return of Barrymore to the type of role that brought him fame on both the stage and screen, has as its feminine lead Helen Twelvetrees, a star in her own right. Other important members of the cast include Jill Esmond, Mary Duncan, William (Stage) Boyd and Ralph Ince.

Barrymore is the dashing lover and courageous fighter in "State's Attorney." As the title indicates, Barrymore portrays a prosecuting attorney. In the story, the role has the star turning against those whom he had previously served as their defender at the bar of justice. He is as ruthless in promoting his own success in the legal profession as he is in his affairs with the fair sex. He wins feminine hearts with the same ease that he wins juries. But in so doing he becomes involved in a series of complications which reach their climax in the closing moments of a dramatic murder trial.

With the early opening of the Barrymore picture, RKO-Keith's likewise changed its entire supplementary program, which is also being continued with the feature. This includes an Edgar Kennedy comedy, "Mother-in-law's Day;" "Spring Antics," an Aesop Fable, and the Pathe News.

STELLAR TRIO ON SCREEN AT METROPOLITAN

Nancy Carroll, Richard Arlen and Pauline Frederick, a trio of screen favorites, are featured in "Wayward," the Paramount picture which heads the screen program at Warner Bros.' Metropolitan Theater.

Based upon Mateel Howe Farnham's novel, "Wild Beauty," the picture tells the story of a beautiful show girl who marries the scion of a wealthy and aristocratic small-town family. The boy's mother thinks the girl beneath the social dignity of the snobbish family and does her best to break up the happy marriage. The boy is torn between devotion to his wife and his mother. The girl then leaves her home and husband. Many trials and dramatic incidents ensue and the boy and his wife are reconciled, while the aristocratic mother-in-law is left alone in her own home to contemplate the severity of her judgment.

In addition to Carroll, Arlen and Frederick, the cast includes John Litel, Margalo Gillmore, Burke Clarke, Dorothy Stickney, Sidney Easton and Gertrude Michael.

Completing the program will be seen Jack Haley, the nimble-footed Ziegfeld dancing star, in a Vitaphone comedy, "Absent Minded Abner;" Robert Ripley's ninth "Believe It or Not" Vitaphone subject, and the latest issue of the Paramount Sound News.

Paula Lind found the life of a successful stage actress so deficient in thrills that she took up aviation as a diversion from her humdrum existence. She holds a pilot's license and flies her own plane. Recently she sought another field of self-expression—the screen. She makes her picture debut in "Wayward."

Interesting News and Notes of Washington War Veterans' Activities

DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS.

This department has been invited to participate in a massing of the colors of all veteran organizations at the Sylvan Theater on May 29. On May 30 the D. A. V. will take part in the Memorial Day parade in the morning. No one will walk. Transportation will be provided by members who own cars. After the parade the outfit will proceed to Arlington Cemetery to lay a wreath on the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier. A section of seats has been reserved in the amphitheater for the D. A. V. Those wanting auto tags to admit them to the cemetery and tickets for the exercises should apply to room 228, Transportation Building. There will be one bus for each of the three service hospitals and U. S. Soldiers' Home to carry disabled veterans to Arlington.

Commander Helen Evans O'Neill, of Atterbury Chapter, who represents the D. A. V. on the District of Columbia Fourth of July committee, was placed in charge of all veterans organizations. Mrs. O'Neill is also in charge of the float for Flag Day, June 14, and is assisted by Comrade Richards, of Ace-Rasmusson Chapter.

A resolution was adopted commending Capt. Thomas Kirby, national legislative chairman, for his excellent work before the economy committee of the House of Representatives regarding disabled veterans legislation.

The department economy and efficiency committee, composed of Department Commander Lee T. Turner and Comrades Melton Hendrick, Spears Phillips and Werner, met the conferees of the budget committee of the Community Chest, Allen Pope and Arthur Sundlin, last Monday afternoon at this department's office. It was recommended that the family welfare cases be provided for by other agencies as the funds were insufficient to carry the load, but that the incidental cases and all investigations should continue to be handled by Welfare Director George W. Philips. This was approved by the department executive committee last Wednesday night.

Several rooms have been reserved for the D. A. V. contingent at the U. S. Grant Hotel, San Diego, Calif., for the week of the national convention, June 18 to 24.

Ace-Rasmusson Chapter.

Ace-Rasmusson Chapter met at the Soldiers, Sailors and Marines Club, at 1015 L street northwest, at 8 o'clock, Thursday evening, May 5. Commander Joe Ashi presided.

The guest speaker of the evening was Congressman Turpin, of Pennsylvania, who stressed the importance of every disabled veteran being a member of the D. A. V.

Chairman Edward Marthill, of the constitution committee, presented the new constitution to Adjutant Earl Hendrick, who read it to the chapter. It was unanimously adopted.

Comrade Richards was elected department executive committeeman to fill the vacancy caused by the promotion of Richard O. Melton, jr., to department senior vice commander.

Department Commander Lee T. Turner asked each member present to get a new member before the national convention meets in June at San Diego.

Chapter Commander Ashi announced that the next meeting would be in honor of the national commander, E. Claude Babcock, on Thursday, June 2. This chapter has grown by leaps and bounds under the leadership of Commander Ashi and Adjt. Hendrick until it is the largest post in the District and is the seventh largest chapter in the whole D. A. V. organization.

Charles Young Chapter.

Col. Charles Young Chapter will hold an official visitation meeting Wednesday, June 12, at the Twelfth Street Y. M. C. A. Refreshments will be served. All members in good standing are invited. National Commander E. Claude Babcock, Department Commander Lee Turner and Department Junior Vice Commander Ralph N. Werner will talk. It is told in "District's Heroes in the World War," compiled by Sergt. L. E. Jaeckel, adjutant of this chapter, how Charles G. Young, while serving as first lieutenant in the 368th Infantry, American Expeditionary Forces, was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross for extraordinary heroism in action with the enemy near Binarville, France, September 27 and 28, 1918. When in command of a scouting patrol he was twice severely wounded by shell fire, but refused medical attention and remained with his men, helping to dress their wounds and evacuate his own men.

Federal Chapter.

The fact that National Commander Babcock has assisted thousands of disabled veterans to get employment, to get better adjudication of their claims for war wounds and injuries and to show Congress that it paid only for actual damage to veterans' bodies and health was confirmed in speeches by Gen. Frank T. Hines, administrator of veterans' affairs; Assistant Secretary of Labor John R. Alpine, Philip D. Swing, member of Congress from California; Claude A. Fuller, member of Congress from Arkansas; William Connery, member of Congress from Massachusetts, and Past Department Commander L. Harold Sothoron, national chairman of the D. A. V. finance committee, in the meeting of Federal Chapter for the presentation of a testimonial to the national commander at the Department of Interior auditorium last Tuesday evening.

Department Commander Lee T. Turner extended the greetings of the District of Columbia Department and said that Mr. Babcock while department commander two years ago completely reorganized the department, secured a place for it in the Community Chest as the only agency for all former service men with service connected disabilities and established the department employment committee and membership committee, which are functioning with flattering results.

Capt. Fred Kochli, holder of the Distinguished Service Cross, and Frank Owens, being the two outstanding men of the department, were the national commander's escort. Department Junior Vice Commander Ralph Werner acted as officer of the day. R. H. Babb and A. C. Jones were color bearers. The success of the affair was due largely to the hard work of Commander Wymer and Comrade L. Harold Sothoron.

Victory Post, No. 4, American Legion, Department of the District of Columbia, held its regular meeting on Tuesday with Commander C. W. Browning presiding.

The following candidates were elected to membership: R. J. Garret, J. E. Magee, R. B. Kennard, K. O. Mentzell and J. M. Derrow.

The post unanimously adopted a resolution submitted by the adjutant, Comrade A. J. Kearney, appealing to the members of Congress to vote down the efforts of those who would place the burden of necessary economies in Government operation on Government clerks. The resolution points out that propagandists have cleverly drawn an inference that the cost of living has been reduced since 1926 and that the Government salary should be reduced accordingly; that they have deliberately overlooked the fact that the Government employes' salary was not increased between 1913 and 1926 in proportion to the increase in the cost of living, and that an employe performing the same work today is actually receiving less than for the same work in 1913.

The Married Life of Helen and Warren

A Gay Vienna Evening Ends in a Murder Mystery

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

"HALF-PAST one," yawned Warren, winding his watch. "Well, we showed Norton this burg, all right."

"Why, he's been here two months," Helen braiding her hair.

"Yes, hanging around laboratories! But he had the time of his life tonight. Had to admit we knew a thing or two about Vienna."

His complacent swagger. So rarely he tried to impress anyone. Why had he tonight?

Dr. Norton an old classmate. Met here by chance—staying at the same hotel.

"Tough luck he's leaving tomorrow. Here, come strip my bed. I'd like to motor him out to the Semmering."

"Dear, you shouldn't have said that about burying himself," dragging off the bolster and fat feather puff. "He laughed, but I don't think he liked it."

"Don't care whether he did or not. We all thought Norton would do big things—not just teach in a freshwater college! He's fossilizing out there."

"Is that why you exerted yourself so to entertain him?" heaping the excess bedding on the couch.

"Exerted myself?" bristling. "Huh, he needed pepping up. Used to be the livest wire in the class——Here, cut the cold-creaming and come to bed."

Her toilet ritual curtailed, Helen drew back the damask curtains and opened the double windows.

"Anchor those darned things so they won't rattle," his sleepy rumble. "Enough hardware there to stock a shop."

Norton's Surprise Visit.

The complicated fasteners adjusted, she leaned out for a glimpse of the Karntner-Ring. Beyond the shadowy trees, the stately buildings mysterious in the starlight.

Slipping between the cool linen sheets. The superfluities removed, nothing so luxurious as a Viennese bed.

But Helen restlessly wakeful. The exhilarating effect of the Heuriger wine.

Reliving the festive evening. Dinner at the Imperial. Coffee at a favorite cafe. Then out to the Heuriger in Grinzing. Finally the Melker Stiftskeller for a glass of their famous Kloster vintage——

What was that? An insistent knocking!

A cablegram?

"Dear! Dear!" reaching over to his bed. Some one's at the door!"

"Eh?" his reluctant awakening. Then, at a louder knock, "What in blazes——"

Switching on the bedside lamp, he jerked into his dressing gown. Shuffling to the door. Sleepily fumbling with the bolt.

"Norton! Great Scott, what's wrong?"

Dr. Norton—coming in here!

Confesses Killing Man.

Helen snatched her negligee as the bathrobed intruder stumbled in.

Dropping into a chair, he buried his face in his hands.

"You're not sick?" brusqued Warren. "That new wine's a bit heady——"

"No, no!" a protesting groan.

"Then what's the trouble?" gripping his shoulder. "What's happened?"

"I think I've killed a man!"

Helen's stifled cry. A moment of hideous silence.

"Nonsense, you've been having a nightmare! Buck up——"

"I tell you I killed him!" hoarsely. "I killed him!"

"Now, pull yourself together. Who was it? Where—when?"

"In my room—not five minutes ago. Curtis, you'll have to stand by me!"

"Know you can count on that. Better tell me just what happened."

"I woke up—saw a man going through my things. In the struggle we got out on the balcony, and he—he——"

"Went over? By George, that's serious."

"A burglar—that's self-defense!" now pacing the room. "They can't hold me for murder?"

"But over here—afraid you're in for a lot of trouble. You're sure he was killed? You saw the body?"

"I didn't look—I couldn't! But I heard the thud——"

"We'll go to your room and investigate," Warren cool at the need for action.

"Oh, you're not leaving me here alone?" quivered Helen. "Not after this!"

Helen Expresses Sympathy.

"Come along, then. Quiet, now, we don't want to wake anybody."

Snatching his raincoat, she threw it over her thin silk robe.

Out in the dim hall. A stealthy procession, slippering noiselessly on the thick carpet.

Up the stairs, Helen tripping over the too-long coat. Around a circuitous corridor to 319.

The room in cyclonic disorder. Chairs overturned, the cover dragged from the table, and upset ashtray.

All staring at the open window—the low stone balustrade and the ominous blackness beyond.

"Wait, Curtis! Don't look down—not yet. I don't want to know——"

But shaking him off, Warren strode grimly out on the balcony.

An intolerable suspense. Only the callous ticking of a clock.

In wild-eyed, rumpled-hair dishevelment, Dr. Norton slumped on the couch.

Helene's aching sympathy. Yet feeling he shouldn't break down. His agitation almost effeminate. And he had courage—to grapple with a burglar!

Helen Afraid to Be Alone.

"Too dark," Warren stepped back into the room. "Can't see a thing down there. But three stories, and with these high ceilings—Fifty-foot drop!"

"And it didn't wake anyone?" twisting a button on her grotesquely large coat. "The man—he didn't cry out?"

"Not a sound. Just his white face as he went over," unsteadily lighting a cigarette. "I'll never forget it—never!"

"You'd think the struggle would've roused someone. Room underneath must be vacant. Well, we've got to find out what's down in that court!"

"To think I've killed a man! Or crippled him for life——"

"Now, no time to waste. You'd better go back to our room, Kitten."

"No, no, not alone. I'll wait for you here."

"If we meet anyone——" Dr. Norton smoothing his hair with shaking hands.

"Not likely at 3 a. m. And the night porter's probably dozing—we can slip by. Anyway, you leave him to me."

Helen stared at the closing door. Mentally following them down the three flights, across the darkened lounge, out to the back court.

What would they find? Better mercifully dead than broken, crippled——

What a ghastly ending to their gay Viennese evening!

Now he couldn't leave tomorrow. Possibly weeks of formalities.

Of course Warren would stay and see him through. Their own schedule hopelessly upset. No, no, selfish to think that!

"Victim" Is Not Found.

A deepening horror of this tragedy-charged room. And the uncertainty.

Stepping fearsomely out on the balcony. They must be down there by now. But no sound from the impenetrable blackness below.

On the stone ledge—something wet! A horrified glance at her palm.

Darting to the washstand. Shudderingly holding her hand under the faucet.

Always that sick reaction to the sight of blood. Sinking faintly on the chair by the desk.

A large flat desk littered with papers. An intricate diagram in red and black. Dr. Norton's work—in Vienna for research under a famous biochemist.

And now—this! Must he always be haunted by such a memory?

Suddenly conscious of another crimson stain—on her turned-back cuff. From the balcony? No, here on the desk!

The door swinging open. Warren first, his face white, set.

"No, we didn't find him," answering her wordless question. "Managed to get away somehow."

"Then he wasn't hurt?" leaping hope. "His fall must've been broken."

"It wasn't!" grimly. "The stones spattered with blood. And this!"

"Drawing from the pocket of his robe—a blood-stained handkerchief! Gingerly he laid it over the edge of the waste-basket.

Helen Sees Through Trick.

Helen's shrinking revulsion. Dropping her eyes from the gruesome evidence——

In the bottom of the basket—that bottle!

Then her breathless glance at the raincoat stain—at the black-and-red diagram——

"He must've had a confederate who got him away. Badly smashed, from all that blood!" scowled Warren. "Now we can't put it off. Have to notify the police."

"I wouldn't!" Helen started up with an enigmatic laugh. "They may not have a sense of humor."

"Eh? What in blazes——"

"Dear, we'll thank Dr. Norton for a thrilling evening—and go back to bed!"

"What's that?" wheeling on her. "You crazy?"

"Far from it!" the professor's surrendering chuckle. "Extremely clever, Mrs. Curtis. But how did you work it out?"

"Why, you were rather messy! You spilled some on the balcony—some on the desk," showing the raincoat cuff. "And there in the basket——"

With a muttered oath, Warren snatched out the empty bottle.

"Red ink!" savagely, hurling it back. "Of all the juvenile stunts—and I fell for it!"

"Not the first time," Dr. Norton's gloating chuckle, "if my memory hasn't fossilized with the rest of me!"

"You old buzzard!" a reluctant grin. Still up to your infernal jokes, eh? Why the devil I didn't think——"

Joke Disgusts Warren.

"You thought I das a dead one! I wanted to prove I haven't been completely mummified out there."

"Well, you win! Made a blamed fool of me, all right," disgustingly. "See here, were you going to let me call the police?"

"No; that was my cue for the denouement," righting the overturned chairs. "But Mrs. Curtis spoiled my climax."

"Huh, she's something of a trickster on her own. Glad she was working against you—not with you! But you certainly staged a blood curdler. Wastin' your time on biochemistry, Norton. You'd do better in the movies!"

Then, yawningly, as he stalked to the door,

"Now, come on, Kitten, maybe we can still grab off some sleep. Take a whole lot more'n a murder to roust me out again tonight!"

Representatives from the subordinate and Rebekah lodges, subordinate encampments and Canton Washington are requested to be present tomorrow evening.

The last visitation of the year will be held on Monday evening, May 23, to Beacon Lodge No. 15 at the Temple. This visitation has been postponed from March 28 due to the fact that the lodge desired to have its visitation when Grand Master Mettler could attend, for at that period, previously scheduled, he was confined to the hospital due to the serious automobile accident which befell him. Arrangements are being made to make this a banner occasion, and members are cordially invitedt to attend.

Grand Master Thomas C. Mettler, accompanied by his official line, officially visited Excelsior Lodge No. 17, the home lodge of Deputy Grand Master Morris L. Dreeben, last Tuesday evening at the Temple.

A large attendance of the members of all lodges was noted. The officers gave a splendid account of their ritualistic work and were highly commended by Grand Representatives W. W. Millan and W. E. Lawson. The reports of the lodge, as rendered by Grand Secretary Andresen and Grand Treasurer James E. Chamberlain, showed the lodge to be in a flourishing condition. Grand Representatives Millan and Lawson each made an address to the members assembled. Following the official part of the ceremony, the lodge adjourned and all were led to the dining room, where a bounteous repast was served the members. The Odd Fellows Band rendered selections during the evening and while the brethren were feasting.

Grand Master Mettler and his corps of officers will accompany Sister President Belle C. Thompson and her officers on her official visit to Miriam Rebekah Lodge, No. 6, on Friday evening at the Odd Fellows Temple.

African Big-Game Hunting Aids Star

Gary Cooper's Trip Puts Him in Good Shape for Hard Film Work.

Hollywood (A.P.).—The recent return of Gary Cooper in health from an African hunting trip reminded Hollywood that the motion picture art no longer demands human sacrifices.

A decisive period has been put to a chapter which taught many tragic lessons in death and permanent illness. The lesson that earning power and physical well being are synonymous has been well learned.

In every studio now physicians, trainers, massage experts and nerve specialists keep sharp eyes on high-priced, high-strung artists, while all known means of safety, including common sense caution, are employed to lower the accident rate.

Gary Cooper's doctors warned that a few more weeks of the strain of unrelieved film work might retire him forever. His studio insisted on a vacation that would involve a complete change. He hunted big game in Africa, and returned completely fit.

Curley Club Acts Host to Archbishop

Pope's Felicitations Read by Baltimore Ecclesiastic at Anniversary Fete.

The Most Rev. Michael J. Curley, Archbishop of Baltimore, delivered the principal address at the tenth anniversary birthday banquet of the Curley Club, in the Willard Hotel last Monday evening, at which time the archbishop was the guest of honor of the organization.

Bearing the sanction and approval of the archbishop, the Curley Club was organized in May, 1922, primarily for the purpose of raising funds for scholarships for poor children, and, secondly, to encourage and promote the association of young Catholic women and men.

Archbishop Curley prefaced his address by announcing the receipt of a cablegram from Pope Pius XI, extending his felicitations and blessing to the members of the Curley Club on the occasion of their birthday anniversary. Other congratulatory letters were read from the Most Rev. Pietro Fumasoni-Biondi, apostolic delegate to the United States, and the Right Rev. John M. McNamara, auxiliary bishop of Baltimore.

The archbishop, in his address, told of the lofty pedestal upon which motherhood of the world stands today, due to the veneration of the Catholic Church for the Mother of God. "The Catholic Church, by its veneration of the Mother of God, has established the lofty ideals by which all our respect and love for motherhood is guided," he said. Archbishop Curley, continuing, told members of the club that 20 young women could be given a four-year course in high school with the funds contributed for Catholic education by the Curley Club this year, urging the organization to continue its splendid work on behalf of higher education in the archdiocese.

Miss Mary L. McGee, mother of the Curley Club, as she is affectionately termed, foundress of the organization, delivered an address, in which she outlined the pioneer days of the organization, naming some of the benefactors of the organization in the days of its youth. The Rev. Francis X. Cavanagh, spiritual director, in his address, challenged the new members of the organization "to show a record of good works and an organization as full of hope and promise ten years from today, which we older members present to you this evening."

Mgr. Eugene J. Connelly, pastor of St. Peter's Church, who was stationed in the chancery office in Baltimore ten years ago, told of the part he played in obtaining the approval of Archbishop Curley for the use of his name by the organization. Mgr. Connelly wrote the letter that carried the archbishop's permission granting the use of his name by the organization in May, 1922.

The Rev. Joseph Sullivan, president of the Marist College, Brookland, who conducted the annual closed retreat for women of the Curley Club over the Palm Sunday week-end, spoke of the edifying example set by the retreatants, when they taxed the accommodations of the retreat house. Father Sullivan announced that a second retreat for young ladies will be held under auspices of the Curley Club in early October.

The Rev. P. T. McAllister, of St. Dominic's, also delivered an address.

The Rev. Michael J. Riordan, pastor of St. Martin's, urged the organization to continue its work on behalf of scholarships for poor children of the archdiocese.

Roland J. Hyland, president, extended the club's greetings, while William J. Boyd, chairman of the tenth anniversary committee was toastmaster.

Miss Gretchen Baden and Miss Kathry Bowers, accompanied by Miss Helen Herbeck and Miss Marietta Dawson, gave several vocal selections; while Miss Mildred Mattimore entertained with piano numbers. Miss Helen Herbeck gave a recitation, and Miss Ann Aslen, accompanied by Miss Peggy Hurley, a violin selection. The Curley Club chorus sang and a string orchestra furnished music.

William J. Bird, chairman of the entertainment committee, was assisted in completing arrangements for the banquet by Miss Dorothy Barrett, Miss Gretchen Baden, Miss Catherine O'Connor, Francis A. McCann, Luke O'Reilly, Joseph Diegelmann and John Townshend.

A reception was held in honor of the archbishop preceding the banquet. Dancing closed the evening's entertainment.

The chronicle committee, under the chairmanship of John B. Townshend, has received many expressions of congratulations on the issuance last week of the tenth anniversary number of the club's monthly bulletin, the May edition having been dedicated to the foundress of the Curley Club, Miss Mary L. McGee.

The tenth anniversary souvenir program, to be published by the organization incidental to the birthday celebration, has been postponed for several weeks, pending the compiling of the history of the organization.

An executive meeting of the Curley Club will be held on next Thursday evening at the residence of Hugh McGarvey, advocate, at which time preliminary arrangements will be made for the annual lawn fete, which will take place in July.

How to Keep Well

FRUIT SENSITIZATION.

A FRIENDLY physician who lives in Florida writes me:

"I want to say from a large experience with tourists who come here and revel in oranges and grapefruit, that many of them suffer from an urticarialike rash on the face, neck, or arms. One Government official who consulted me for such a rash was eating two or three oranges and a grapefruit daily. Four days after he stopped eating fruit his rash was gone. I have seen many similar cases. It seems to be an idiosyncrasy and, strange to say, is noticed most often in blonds. It is customary now to give orange juice to babies. I have learned that an unripe orange is just as irritating to a young child's stomach and intestines as is a green apple, and unripe grapefruit is worse. When a baby is given fruit juice the parents must be certain it is from ripe fruit."

My friend wrote in protest against a reply that I have made to a question about fruit as the cause of a certain rash. I think he read into my answer a little more than I put there, but if he did so it is certain that many others had a similar interpretation, and all who did will be interested in the above quotations.

He makes two points. One is that some blonds are sensitized to oranges and grapefruit. Of course he is right. While the ability of strawberries to cause nettlerash due to sensitization is better known, there are those who have learned that oranges, grapefruit, or some other fruit is poison to them. Nobody knows just how or why these sensitizations occur, but many are aware that they do occur, and they are not permitted to forget. Furthermore, they know that the easiest way to escape trouble is to avoid the cause. Some know that sensitization can be proved by simple skin tests. Nor do we know why blonds are generally more subject to skin troubles.

The second point this physician makes is of another kind. It is that ripe fruit and their juices are likely to be wholesome, while the same fruit eaten green is harmful. In the great university of education through experience children learn that fact in the first grade. It is called the elementary, clinical course in stomach ache caused by eating green apples. All pupils take this course. It is generally given in June and July. My friend's observation is that when the children who take this course become parents they forget what they learned in the grades, or else they don't know that what they learned about green apples applies also to oranges, grapefruit, and all other fruit. They also forget that whatever is true of the delicate digestive tract of older children applies with greater force to the more delicate digestive tracts of babies.

Ripening changes the starch of green fruit to the sugar of that which is ripe. It also changes the acids, ferments, and other ingredients of the fruit and its juice.

JUST IGNORE IT.

Mrs. E. H. W. writes: My little daughter, 3½ years old, frequently walks on her toes like a toe dancer. Should I encourage this habit or forbid it?

REPLY.

Neither. Take no notice of it. See that others follow the same policy. This treatment will cure her and probably in a short time.

IT IS A FORM OF CANCER.

M. M. P. writes: Will you describe sarcoma, its cause, and its effect upon a person?

REPLY.

Sarcoma is one of the forms of cancer, or, rather, the sarcomas are forms of cancer. There are several kinds of sarcoma. They have the expected effects of malignant tumors.

Club Section's Art Exhibition Is Successful

Chevy Chase Women Appear in Colonial Costume at Bicentennial Tea.

A true colonial atmosphere prevailed at the Bicentennial tea and art exhibit held by the art section of the Woman's Club of Chevy Chase, Md., on Tuesday afternoon at the Chevy Chase, Md., Library. Antiques and work done by section members were arranged in booths which were decorated with Paisley shawls, block painting and old-fashioned flowers.

Mrs. John Boyle, jr., in attractive colonial costume, presided at the tea table. Other members in costume were Mrs. Hartley Jackson, Mrs. Walter Miles, Mrs. Harry Price and Mrs. Clarence Dawson, sr., leader of the section. Among the exhibits which attracted particular attention was a set of doll furniture belonging to Mrs. Miles' great-great-grandmother.

Mrs. Nolan, a native of Czechoslovakia, displayed some of her exquisitely carved furniture, as well as her native costume. The copper work and block printing which had been done by members showed unusual talent. Mrs. Dawson's antique jewelry would delight any collector.

Besides all the beautiful things of the members, W. Lester Stevens, noted landscape artist, loaned twenty of his finest pictures for the exhibit. Pictures done by Mrs. Fred Keplinger, Mrs. Hewitt Robertson and Mrs. Miles were also a part of the exhibit.

The regular monthly club meeting will be held next Wednesday at the Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church. Mrs. Karl D. Williams will be the luncheon hostess. There will be election of officers. The nature section will have a sale of annual plants for the benefit of the Montgomery General Hospital. Mrs. Arthur Palmer on behalf of the civics section, presented a tea cart, dishes and a pewter tea set to the nurses' home of the hospital.

The club was represented by 22 tables at the card party given for the benefit of the Montgomery County Federation Scholarship Fund.

Rich Mineral Deposits Hidden Beneath Ohio

Delaware, Ohio (U.P.).—Rich, hitherto untouched mineral deposits lie beneath the surface of western Ohio, possibly close enough to the surface to make prospecting profitable, according to a report by George B. Hubbard, Oberlin College geologist, before the meeting of the Ohio Academy of Science here.

The deposit, Hubbard said, is similar to a pre-Cambrian rock strata in Ontario containing some gold, silver, nickel, cobalt and copper. The geophysical method of prospecting which permits detection of mineral deposits from the surface could be used in exploring the Ohio deposit, it was said. The deposit was believed about 2,700 feet beneath the surface.

With the Citizens

A special meeting of the Federation of Citizens Associations may be called this month to consider a report by the fiscal relations committee on the Capper bill to increase the District taxes on local public utilities.

L. A. Carruthers, chairman of the committee, at the last meeting suggested that some action should be taken on the measure before the regular June meeting, but that his committee had no report to make as the bill had never been referred to it. Because of the complexities of the bill, the delegates decided to postpone discussion until a study was made by the committee.

George E. Sullivan, acting president of the federation, said he would keep in touch with Mr. Carruthers and probably would call a special meeting as soon as the report is ready.

Undaunted by the action of the House of Representatives in adopting the street railway merger bill as submitted by the Public Utilities Commission and over the opposition of almost the combined citizens organizations, William McK. Clayton, chairman of the public utilities committee of the federation, and other delegates are still working in the hope that a more acceptable measure will come out of the Senate and that the House will agree to most of the Senate's amendments at a conference.

Relief Corps At Service for Comdr. Tindall

Auxiliary of G. A. R. Plans to Hold Memorial Exercise on Next Sunday.

The Woman's Relief Corps, auxiliary to the Grand Army of the Republic, headed by its president, Mrs. Louise Watson, attended the funeral of the late Commander William Tindall on Tuesday, May 3, at the funeral parlors of Alpheus Speare. The services were conducted by Senior Vice Commander William F. Dorsey of the G. A. R., assisted by Adjutant E. D. Godfrey, Past Commander Francis J. Young, Comrades Convis Parker, H. H. Shepherd, Hamilton, Kline and Dr. Henry Johnston, all comrades of the late commander. These exercises were beautiful and impressive.

Commander Tindall had been Commander of the Grand Army of the Republic since last convention of February, 1932.

On next Sunday memorial exercises will be held on the Potomac River in honor of the men who lost their lives at sea. The steamer General Rucker will leave the War College wharf at 1:30 p. m. and wend its way down the river while the members on board scatter flowers on the waters.

On Sunday, May 29, at 2 p. m. the memorial exercises at St. Mary's, Prospect Hill and Glenwood Cemeteries will be sponsored by Kit Carson Corps, under the personal direction of Mrs. Mary H. Wingate.

On the same day at 2:30 p. m. the memorial exercises for the air men will take place on the Key Bridge. The services will be conducted by Mrs. M. North, assisted by members of the Woman's Relief Corps. These exercises were originated by Mrs. North and have been personally conducted by her for many years.

Plans are under way for the celebration of Flag Day by the Woman's Relief Corps. The program will be under the direction of Mrs. E. Helen Temple, department patriotic instructor.

Bed Equipment Carried To Court by Violator

East St. Louis, Ill. (U.P.).—Prepared to spend at least a year in jail because he violated a court order, Robert W. Mengenity, 53, East St. Louis, carried a blanket and pillow under his arm when he appeared before Circuit Judge Henry W. Miller here recently.

Mengenity also exhibited a toothbrush, razor and other necessities. He was allowed to keep everything except the razor and officials promised to return it to him when he is released.

In passing sentence Judge Miller said he disliked sentencing Mengenity because of his age. He added, however, that Mengenity had violated a court order and therefore should be punished.

WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, MAY 15, 1932. R

SLIGO PARK HILLS SECTION IS PRAISED

60 Homes in Development Are Occupied by Owners.

Few residential operations in the country have met with the phenomenal and almost immediate success as that of the North Washington Realty Company's Sligo Park Hills. The first homes were opened in May, 1929, on land which has been in the family of Maj. E. Brooke Lee, president of the company, for four generations. The development now includes 60 homes occupied by owners.

The company, whose activities are also manifested in the Northgate, North Hills projects, has been constructing from 30 to 50 homes a year. As an example of the amazing success of the Sligo Park Hills enterprise, officials of the company announce that eight new houses have been sold within the past few weeks; three more are completed and ready for inspection; eleven are in process of construction, and more than two-score are owned and occupied. A latest group of four were sold before completion.

This enticing tract was developed by the company to provide an ideal community on one of the few natural, rolling ground sections in the north Washington area. It borders the lovely Sligo creek, which flows through State-owned park land, site of the Maryland National Capital Park and Planning Commission's beautification plan.

Under the parking program, play fields, tennis courts, baseball diamonds, swimming pools and other recreative features will be offered the nearby residents. The trend of population northward has resulted in the opening of Piney Branch road, which will be completed this fall as a State highway at a total cost to the District of $65,000 and $15,000 in adjacent Maryland. This will furnish a direct arterial highway between Georgia avenue and Sixteenth street northwest to Sligo Park Hills and will continue on to connect with the Baltimore roads and the University of Maryland.

The average value of Sligo Park Hills homes is $12,000. Their price range is from $9,950 for large, modern brick bungalows on large lots to $14,000 for English cottage type homes on large corner lots. The development is traversed by wide concrete roads and is improved with all urban utilities, such as gas, water, street lighting, fire hydrants and other services as are found in a modern, thoroughly restricted community. All of its homes are of detached type and located on lots varying from 70 to 90 feet.

The development is a place where a man of moderate means can have a well-constructed home with plenty of ground and desirable neighbors, on terms similar to rent. The development is but eight minutes' drive from the University of Maryland.

British Domestic Wins Weight-Lifting Contest

London (U.P.).—With almost as much ease as she picks up a cup or a plate from her mistress' table, Miss Ivy Russell, a domestic servant, picked up a 300-pound weight, and became the first British woman weight-lifting "champion."

Ivy is 25, and has bobbed hair. To win the championship she had to beat Tillie Tinmouth, of Sunderland, another strong, silent woman.

Ivy explained that she lifted the weight in what is called a "dead lift." "I don't know exactly when I discovered that I was so strong," she said. "I weigh only 126 pounds, but I always admired feats of strength."

Two Teetotalers Face Worst "Morning After"

Boston (U.P.).—Paradoxically, the two Bostonians who probably have more "hangovers" than anyone else in town are teetotalers.

J. D. Barnes and William H. Place are Uncle Sam's official liquor destroyers. Daily they dump something like $10,000 worth of confiscated contraband into a sink at the appraisers' stores.

Constant exposure to the odors of dumped liquor gives them that "morning after" feeling, they report.

Old-Time Dog-Catcher Abolished by Seattle

Seattle (U.P.).—The old-fashioned dog catcher—"boogey-man" of childhood—is no more here. In his place are courteous young men who call themselves "educators." Their job primarily is not to collect dogs, but to aid pet owners in caring for them, to pick up hungry stray animals and educate the public in kindness to dumb animals. The plan has been started by Harry Irelan, newly elected manager of the King County Humane Society.

SURVEY OF HOUSING NEEDS TO BE MADE

Real Estate Convention Will Plan National Study of Problem.

Measures for a complete survey of housing needs of the United States as they apply to local requirements will be a subject of discussion before the coming national conference on housing, to be held in connection with the annual convention of the National Association of Real Estate Boards in Cincinnati. The plan is for examination of each city's actual situation in regard to existing homes and home needs through cooperation of all local civic and business agencies interested in the housing problem, the work in each city to be under the leadership of the local real estate board.

Financing sources for housing and particularly new methods of financing housing projects will be discussed.

Laws to Be Outlined.

Legislation now in progress to protect the financing of present owned homes will be outlined. This legislation includes notably the proposed bill to provide 12 Federal home loan banks for discounting mortgages on urban homes and a proposed amendment to the Federal revenue act providing for the privilege of capitalization of carrying charges in calculating capital gains or losses.

The first subject to come up will be, "Does a Housing Problem Exist in America, and, If So, What Is Its Nature?"

The promise of new technical developments will be reviewed.

The conference will consider tax plans in relation to home ownership and the realtor's part in providing better housing.

Real estate owners of the country, joined with the National Association of Real Estate Boards through its property owners' division, formed to attack the present critical tax problem, have completed the choice of 20 persons to form the executive committee of the division. The committee will take an active part in the important phase of the association's coming annual convention, which will be concerned with action toward a more equitable distribution of the tax burden.

On Executive Committee.

The enlarged executive committee, with new members chosen in accordance with action taken at the association's Baltimore convention of last June, is announced by Andrew L. Moore, Pontiac, Mich., chairman of the division, as made up of the following.

Term expiring December, 1934:

Mason Case, Los Angeles, Calif.; Andrew L. Moore, Pontiac, Mich.; Harry Leyman, Cincinnati, Ohio; Harry Latter, New Orleans, La.; Fred M. Strohm, Rochester, N. Y.; Adam Schantz, Dayton, Ohio; A. Ross Hill, Kansas City, Mo. (former president of the University of Missouri).

Term expiring December, 1933:

Judge Arthur J. Lacy, Detroit, Mich. (former chairman of the property owners' division of the association); Stephen W. Sleeper, Boston, Mass.; Albert W. Swayne, Chicago, Ill.; C. L. Stealey, Oklahoma City, Okla.; Harry W. Butts, Lancaster, Pa.; James M. Walker, Memphis, Tenn.; Judge Arthur V. Lashly, St. Louis, Mo.

Term expiring December, 1932:

George C. Boardman, San Francisco, Calif.; Charles E. Rousek, East Orange, N. J.; David V. Sutton, New York, N. Y.; Joe Rand Beckett, Indianapolis, Ind. (State senator for Indiana); Gen. Nathan William MacChesney, Chicago, Ill. (general counsel, National Association of Real Estate Boards); F. W. Drybrough, Louisville, Ky.

Trees Represent 13 States.

Revere, Mass. (U.P.).—Thirteen trees—one from each of the original thirteen States—have been set out on the lawn of the American Legion Building. They were donated by the governors of the various States.

LONG BEACH PROVES POPULAR FIRST DAY

Many Purchasers to Locate Friends as Prospective Buyers of Lots.

Long Beach made its debut last Sunday. This development, situated eight miles below Prince Frederick in Calvert County, Md., is owned by the Long Beach Co., with offices in the Metropolitan National Bank Building, Washington.

An exceptionally large crowd attended the opening, and so many purchasers at the initial sale have requested an opportunity to locate friends as neighbors that the Long Beach Co. has agreed to extend the period for a special 10 per cent discount for several days.

Visitors the first day were pleasantly surprised at the extent of the improvements already completed, with the streets and roads in exceptionally good condition. With the route from Washington extending over State highways, Long Beach was found easily accessible.

Decision to develop this property was reached only after a careful study of the U. S. Government Geodetic Survey maps, which disclosed here the only sand beach of any extent along the Chesapeake. That the development proved attractive is attested by the large number of first-day sales.

When the crowd got its first view of the virgin stretch of sand beach stretching for miles with its border of natural groves extending to the water's edge, the reaction was such as to assure the success of Long Beach. Particularly attractive was the display of flowering shrubs and trees and the natural gardens of wild flowers.

A pavilion for the accommodation of guests of the company, wherein lunches are served at city prices, is being used. Construction of a pier will be started within the next few weeks. Cutting through of streets is well under way and is being carried on as engineers complete their platting.

A building site consisting of two choice lots, was presented to Walter F. Grimes, 1014 Tenth street southeast, as a part of the opening day ceremonies. Special attention is being paid to the accommodation of the crowds that are expected this week-end.

Long Beach is reached via Upper Marlboro, where the road that crosses the Patuxent should be taken. The motorist then follows Route 416, the new concrete State highway, directly south to Prince Frederick, where information headquarters are located. The entrance to Long Beach is located 8 miles south of Prince Frederick.

150 Bears Roaming Montana Mountains

Missoula, Mont. (U.P.).—Approximately 150 grizzly bears roam the mountains and forests of Montana.

A survey recently completed by the forest service indicated that of that number approximately 100 may be found in the vicinity of Missoula.

The bears are a hardy race and are far more able to withstand the advances of civilization than the wolf. There are but twenty wolves remaining in the State according to the survey.

State Forests Earned $40,700.

Harrisburg, Pa. (U.P.).—Pennsylvania's State forests earned more than $40,700 for the State treasury during the last year, according to a report by the department of forests and waters. The largest single item of revenue came from renting camp sites, which brought in $25,000.

40-Cent Auction Picture Is Valued at $1,500

Chico, Calif. (U.P.).—Profit of $1,499.60 on a 40-cent investment is good business, U. A. Raby believes.

He purchased a painting for 40 cents at an auction. When art critics saw the painting they valued it at $1,500. They said it was the work of W. L. Sonntag, recognized early American artist.

Depicting three miners digging on a knoll, the painting bore the date 1855. It has been taken to Los Angeles for exhibit at the Jonathan Club.

Boston (U.P.).—A town planning contest for New England boys and girls under 18 is being conducted by the Massachusetts George Washington Bicentennial Commission.

The competitors must describe conditions in their own communities as they are today and as they think they should be in the future. In addition they must draw "the Ideal Town."

The town in which the winning plan is made will be given a bust of George Washington, and the governor of the State will dedicate a tree there.

Soft-Shell Hen's Egg Surrounded Hard One

Richmond, Va. (U.P.).—A hen egg with a soft shell on the outside and a hard shell within was found by Sheriff C. E. Jones, of Pulaski, Va., recently.

The egg resembled any soft-shelled egg, but it was hard inside when broken. The outer shell was removed, and surrounded by the albumen was an egg with a hard shell, but much smaller than an ordinary egg. The inner egg contained only a yolk.

BUILDING LOAN UNITS SHOWN TO BE SOUND

Reports to League Indicate Fair Reserve Over Real Estate Owned.

Chicago, Ill., May 14.—First quarter 1932 statements from building and loan associations reporting to the United States Building and Loan League evidence sound financial condition, Morton Bodfish, the league executive manager, reports.

The associations giving their first quarter's status were 633, and show a sizable excess of reserve over real estate owned, decreasing real estate holdings and diminished borrowings from other institutions.

Capital invested by members of these cooperative institutions is 90.23 per cent of the total liabilities. The contingent reserves and undivided profits of the reporting associations constitute 4.63 per cent of the liabilities.

Mr. Bodfish points out that the aggregate reserve exceeds the real estate owned by the reporting associations by 1.1 per cent of the total liabilities. Real estate holdings were 3.4 per cent of the assets for the quarter ended April 1 and showed a decrease in the last month of the quarter, indicating increased home purchases partially due to the moving season now at hand and largely due to low cost of homes.

Borrowed Money Figure Down.

Borrowed money was down to 3.17 per cent of the liabilities at the end of the quarter.

The reporting associations are in 12 widely scattered States, constituting 11 per cent of the total assets invested in these home financing institutions at present.

Of total assets 86 per cent is now represented by mortgage loan holdings, the 633 associations show. The mortgages are practically confined to owner-occupied homes and are made on the monthly repayment plan or amortization basis, which building and loan associations have found most satisfactory in home financing for 101 years.

"Installment shares, that is, the monthly or weekly payment share of the small saver on which dividends are credited toward maturity, were 51.5 per cent of the shares held by members in reporting associations," says the league executive manager. "The small investor is still carrying the larger burden of creating the funds with which home owners and would-be home owners are financed today. This fact becomes increasingly apparent when the percentage reported here is qualified by facts from three other States. These States, having an aggregate 35.6 per cent of the total building and loan assets in the country, had 94 per cent, 88 per cent and 58 per cent, respectively, of their members' capital in installment shares at the time of the last annual reports. The small systematic saver who was the basis of the building and loan plan in the beginning is still far ahead, these figures prove.

Savers' Status Better.

"Two per cent of the assets of reporting associations are in cash loans on the security of shares, and this percentage is decreasing from month to month, indicating a slightly better financial status among savers. This betterment is probably due to the fact that the cost of living has decreased faster than incomes and salaries have decreased among the majority of those who are working.

"Altogether the reports of these 633 associations show a healthy condition. Here in these balance sheets we find reason to believe that the safety record of the first half of 1931, 99.89 per cent, is being upheld during the first half of 1932. There are some 12,000,000 shareholders in the United States who benefit by this safety.

"Demand for loans increased in March over the February lending total, and steadily growing waiting lists for loans are reported. Percentage of loans granted for refinancing showed a steady increase for each of the months of the quarter, with demand for remodeling loans showing itself stronger. These conditions indicate a strong need for building and loan association services with immediate profitable employment of all new funds invested with them."

Savant Approves Taxi Dance Halls

Survey Says They Fill Big Place in City Life of Masculine Misfits.

Chicago (A.P.).—Taxi dance halls, background for that song, "Ten Cents a Dance," were approved by Prof. Paul G. Cressey, of New York University, in a 300-page national survey as satisfying a need in big city life, provided they are well supervised and respectably conducted.

In an extract released by the University of Chicago Press, publishers of the forthcoming book, Prof. Cressey opposed abolition of taxi dance halls, but set forth needs for drastic changes in management. He held they offered a social life for masculine misfits.

At present there is a clean-up drive against the halls in Chicago, and many of the larger ones have been closed by court order. Prof. Cressey made a four-year study of the dime-a-dance places here, starting as a special investigator for the Juvenile Protective Association. He also included in his survey the taxi dances of New York, San Francisco, St. Louis and other big cities.

ECONOMY IN OFFICE STRUCTURES LISTED

Smaller Space Described as Essential Item in Low Operating Cost.

Decisions made when present office structures were still in the blueprint stage are now in a very large degree determining the degree to which those buildings may be operated with proper economy.

That is one of the facts brought out in a bulletin on office building management policies which has recently been issued by the National Association of Real Estate Boards. The bulletin, prepared by the property management division of the association as a special service to its members, lists extremely practical details of method through which buildings may show a satisfactory balance sheet under present difficult conditions.

John B. Lear, of Philadelphia; E. B. Murray, of Kansas City, and Leo J. Sheridan, of Chicago, are the authorities whose discusions are included in the brochure.

Size Is Important.

Here are some of the things listed by Mr. Sheridan as practically valuable in making a building rentable—things which present experience shows should be watched for at the time the building is built:

(1) Office space should be well distributed as to depth, between 20 and 30 feet in proper proportions.

Studies made in several cities reveal the rather surprising fact that the average office tenant occupies less than 1,000 square feet of space. Accepting this figure, the conclusion is that 40 to 45 per cent of the space in a building should be 20 feet in depth, 40 to 45 per cent of the space 25 feet in depth, while the remaining 10 to 20 per cent should be 28 to 30 feet in depth.

2. Center columns should be placed at 17 to 18 feet.

3. Utilities, including the elevators, should be concentrated as much as possible in one section of the building to permit the greatest flexibility of floor development of large or small tenants.

Heavy Operation Cost.

4. Dark spaces should be employed for utilities.

5. To avoid heavy operation cost and rapid obsolescence the utmost flexibility and elasticity must be provided for subdivision of office space. This means:

Interior columns should be placed wherever possible near corridor lines so that subdivision into areas larger than the unit space is possible in renting.

6. Light outlets should be placed in the outer columns instead of on partitions in order to save expense when partitions are moved.

7. Plumbing and heating facilities should be arranged to secure maximum economy in making future alterations of space.

Arrangement of Corridors.

8. Corridors should be so arrenged that dead ends may be closed up and thrown into office space for larger suites.

9. Corridor doors should be opposite windows, and never opposite the stonework or mullions dividing them.

Proper width and depth of offices has a very definite effect on the rentable quality of a modern office building, Mr. Lear also Emphasizes. An office 17½ feet wide and 26 feet deep can be rented for as much, ordinarily, as an office 20 feet wide and 32 feet deep. But the larger unit has 185 square feet more of floor space to be taken care of. And in the present day competition of building with building, costs of operation count.

HOME OWNER HELD PROTECTED IN CRISIS

Advantages Enjoyed in Time of Economic Distress Pointed Out.

The borrowing power of the home as compared with more liquid forms of security has been strongly emphasized during the current economic depression, according to T. T. Hawksworth, district manager of the home construction division of Sears, Roebuck & Co., with offices at 1106 Connecticut avenue, in a statement which points out that the nonliquid character of real estate has served to restrict closely foreclosures on homes.

"The logical advantages of home ownership in time of general economic distress have been emphasized more strongly than ever by the current depression," Mr. Hawksworth stated. "This is particularly true when the home is compared with other and more liquid forms of security."

Safe From Margin Calls.

"Losses of savings invested in homes have been inconsiderable as compared with losses due to shrinkage in values suffered by holders of virtually all stocks and most bonds.

"The owner of an equity in a home does not find this equity jeopardized or wiped out by additional margin calls every time the stock market reacts to an emotional or political upset at Washington, London, Paris or Tokyo.

"The very lack of liquidity in real estate supports and protects values and operates in favor of the home owner. This has served to keep foreclosures on homes to a minimum.

Adjustments Are Easy.

"Those who bought homes on the amortized mortgage plan find little difficulty in making adjustments as to their current payments in such a way as to tide them over temporary difficulties. In the case of maturing straight mortgages, the same spirit of accommodation has been notable on the part of the principal sources of small mortgage funds.

"There is relatively far less difference between 1929 and 1932 residential price levels than between 1929 and 1932 values of more liquid forms of security. The owner of the average home borrows up to 65 per cent on a valuation which has shrunk comparatively little from his original investment. The borrower on stocks and bonds offers a security the borrowing power of which in most instances has shrunk to a point far below its actual value.

"A definite turn for the better in the general economic situation will be felt by the home owner first, since the long cessation of home building and the consequent shrinkage in vacancies will promptly add to the value of his home."

2,000 BUILDING-LOAN DIPLOMAS PREPARED

Institute to End Successful Course in Night School This Month.

The American Savings, Building & Loan Institute is completing a record school year this month, conferring some 2,000 certificates and diplomas on night school students of the home financing business in which $9,000,000,000 of small savers' funds are invested, it is announced by Clarence T. Rice, Kansas City, Kans., president of the institute. The graduates and students are all workers in the building and loan associations of the country which have financed 6,500,000 homes since the twentieth century began.

List of those receiving professional credits this year is four times the size of the 1931 list, and is distributed among a greater number of cities than in any of the past nine years of the institute's existence. Thirty-one cities representing every section of the country will benefit by the increased knowledge of property values and investment in such property, as a result of this banner year of the building and loan educational unit, Mr. Rice declares.

Summer plans of the organization include efforts to extend benefits of the building and loan educational unit to still more cities, and to enroll other workers in the institute chapters for next fall when the school term reopens.

"The institute is the division of the building and loan business devoted to training workers in the various phases of their work, legal, public relations, appraisal, lending policies, accounting, letter writing and others," explains Mr. Rice. "This year has seen the greatest progress in its nine years' history, with more members of the organization, more students in its classes, chapters in more cities and publication of a record number of books resulting from the research of the institute into the specific home financing needs of our times. Last year 500 certificates were awarded at the end of the school year. Contrast the 2,000 this year. There is a definite feeling in this business that the choice is between education and replacement for the individual, just as in every financial or commercial organization which is trying to progress in a changing world.

"The building and loan association has a distinct service to perform for the community, stimulation of systematic savings by earnings large enough to make it worth the saver's while, and fostering home ownership which is the permanent wealth of any community. Concentrated and continual study on the part of the men and women who manage these associations will ultimately mean greater wealth for the community, and the prosperity of the country can never go far beyond the degree of prosperity of its various communities."

TIRED OF YOUR SINK?
You Can't Change It Often, So Use White

Neutral colored kitchen equipment adapts to many decorations.

By HOPE HAMMOND

Interior Furnishings Editor, the Woman's Home Companion, Written for The Washington Post.

To the modern housewife the appearance of her kitchen is as important as its efficiency and convenience.

Achievement of suitable color schemes is hampered in the kitchen by such essential items of equipment as the sink, the cabinet, the kitchen table. These serve as decidedly limiting factors, for they can not be changed when one grows tired of their shade, as can the walls and curtains.

Within recent years some of the lessons of the hotel and restaurant kitchens have been applied to the home, with the result that rustless white metals are coming into vogue for sinks, table tops and even for trim.

This feature is of exceptional importance as regards the sink, which can not be taken out and discarded every time one seeks to make a distinctive change in the decoration of the room.

Decoratively, it is now beginning to be realized that equipment of these materials is not only neutral in tone, but it reflects light from both inside and outside sources, thus catching the shade of the entire decorative scheme.

HOOVER COMMENDS HOME OWNER CREDIT

President Urges Adoption of System of Banks to Aid Residents.

"A home and the home owner are the best credit risks in our country," said President Hoover in a special statement prepared for the June Ladies' Home Journal and released last week, in which he urged that the proposed Federal system of home mortgage discount banks, to aid the home owner, be enacted into law.

The President's statement, the first he has prepared for publication for any periodical since he entered the White House, was occasioned by the publication of the Ladies' Home Journal's four-point program for home financing in an article, "Money for Homes," by Chesla C. Sherlock.

Mr. Sherlock, who has made an exhaustive study of the home ownership problem in the United States, recently testified on that subject before both the Senate and the House committees on banking and currency.

Points in Home Financing.

The four points of the home financing program are as follows:

1. Extend financing coverage: (a) President Hoover's home loan bank system. (b) Home finance acceptance corporations. (c) Supplementary local financing groups, sponsored by the building industry and local finance.

2. Adopt simpler mortgage procedure: (a) Urge adoption of the uniform mortgage act. (b) Demand long-term loans, up to fifteen years, amortized monthly. (c) Demand that loans be merged in one instrument.

3. Demand known standards of value: (a) Urge adoption of a national standard of appraisal. (b) Demand rigid control of building specifications. (c) Improve standards of inspection and supervision.

4. Follow sound credit principles: (a) The purchaser should have saved 15 to 25 per cent of the total purchase price. (b) The purchaser should not obligate himself to carry total monthly charges of more than 25 per cent of his income.

Wrote the President: "To possess one's own home, however small, is the hope of every family in our country. That is the American idea, born of an exquisite sentiment, nurtured by a long national tradition and proved right by its innumerable practical advantages.

Better Results Expected.

"Many things have conspired to frustrate this hope to a lesser accomplishment than the welfare of the Nation demands. * * * Nevertheless, we can and should now do better."

Pointing out that the "financing of home ownership has not kept pace with improvement in design," President Hoover's statement tells of the proposed measure to set up a Federal system of home mortgage discount banks, to which may belong building and loan associations, savings banks, deposit banks, farm loan banks, &c.

"The broad purpose," he continues, "is to provide for the home owner a comparable background of stable credit with that we have already provided nationally for the business man through the Federal Reserve banks and for the farmer through the farm loan banks and the intermediate credit banks. The plan and method is not to engage the new institutions in the business of providing direct loans, but to give impulse, security and safety and lower interest rates to the already existing institutions—especially the mutual institutions—in order that they may extend the fullest measure of credit to would-be home owners."

Immediate Action Urged.

The President considers the creation of this system "immediately desirable" because of "certain emergency phases," pointing to the great numbers of people who are in danger of losing their homes, which often means the loss of their savings of years, because of the difficulties in obtaining renewal for their short-term mortgages. He further believes such a system would stimulate construction, and consequently industry and employment, in the thousands of communities where the need and demand for new homes is at present hampered by lack of credit.

"This plan has found sympathetic support and indorsement of thousands of savings banks, building and loan associations, country bankers, and, above all, from would-be home owners," the President concludes, voicing the hope that the proposed measure for the Federal system of home mortgage discount banks will soon be enacted into law.

Statements by prominent business and real estate men indorsing the Ladies' Home Journal's four-point program for home financing were also published. Among those who voice their approval are George B. Cortelyou, president Consolidated Gas Co.; B. G. Dahlberg, president of the Celotex Co.; William E. Best, president United States Building and Loan League; R. W. Wetmore, secretary Shevlin Pine Sales Co.; Lawrence T. Stevenson, president National Association of Real Estate Boards; Lewis H. Brown, president Johns-Manville Corporation, and William B. Mason, vice president Masonite Corporation.

Machinery Called Broken.

In "Money for Homes," Mr. Sherlock cites specific examples to prove that:

"Our home-financing machinery has broken down. At this writing it is not functioning in nine out of ten of the communities of the country. It has not functioned properly for several years."

The main reason for this, according to Mr. Sherlock is "that the law surrounding the sale of real estate is not geared to the needs and demands of the times in which we live." It is easy enough to buy a fur coat or an automobile on the installment plan, he continues, because the law protects the seller so he can recover his property when the buyer fails to meet his payments. But in the case of real estate, Mr. Sherlock shows, while the law intends to protect the buyer and give him every advantage in saving his homestead in case he fails to meet the payments, it actually operates to his detriment because the delays allowed by law in case of foreclosure make capital timid.

Mr. Sherlock firmly believes that the Ladies' Home Journal's four-point program is the way out of the present difficulties facing the financing of home ownership, because it is "simple," "sound" and "workable."

He urges voters to exert pressure upon their representatives in Congress and in the State Legislatures so that this program may become a reality.

Champion Angler Praises River Fish

Grants Pass, Oreg. (U.P.).—Fred K. Durnham, of San Francisco, world renowned fly caster and angler, has become a confirmed Rogue River fishing addict. He recently caught three Chinook salmon in less than an hour.

The Pacific Chinook are harder fighters and larger fish than the Atlantic salmon which are caught in the famed Restigouche River, of New Brunswick, he said.

Cat Mothers Fox Brood.

Grants Pass, Oreg. (U.P.).—When a mother silver fox owned by Ellis Phillips was unable to care for her offspring, an old mother housecat took up the burden. Kittens and fox-pups now crowd in friendly fashion at meal times.

Route of First White Settler in Texas Traced

Austin, Tex. (U.P.).—The route of Capt. Cabeza de Vaca, first white settler of Texas, has been traced across the State by Geologist Robert T. Hill, of Dallas Tex., solely by applying geographical conditions to the Spanish adventurer's account of his early travels.

Dr. Hill not only has been able to mark out the route by references to the country contained in the Spanish explorer's report of his journey, but has followed it on the ground, verifying landmarks.

Part of Dr. Hill's conclusion is that Capt. de Vaca, after leaving the Texas gulf coast, where he lived among the Indians for six years, traveled as far west as Bisbee, Ariz.

ALTERATION WORK SHOWING INCREASE

Modernization Is Forced by Rental Competition, Avers Expert.

Competition for tenants and revaluation of rental properties due to deflation will force alterations in many older structures in the near future, in the opinion of L. Seth Schnitman, chief statistician, F. W. Dodge Corporation.

Continuous modernization is forced by competition between old and new buildings, he points out in the current issue of the Architectural Record. "When the handicap is largely inherent in the structure itself, this competition can usually be met better by rebuilding than by altering," he says. "Quite naturally there are important exceptions to this general rule. Each contemplated alteration project involving major structural changes must necessarily be considered separately. Any major alteration which is designed to correct obsolescence and to improve or restore revenue will fail, however, if population and business shifts, rising or falling land values, traffic conditions, population densities and sundry other social and economic factors are ignored.

"Modernization is sound when it is largely a matter of maintenance; such maintenance might involve the installation of movable fixtures or equipment, more up-to-date elevators and fire doors or heating improvements. But modernization that entails large basic structural changes to an existing skeleton or shell is likely to be economically unsound. Alterations of this latter type connote a condition of advanced obsolescence. The most economic way to meet the ravages of this type of obsolescence is to destroy the causes—to wreck and rebuild anew. In this manner one can more positively insure a fuller economic utilization of land.

"A check-up of the construction results of the first quarter of 1932 discloses that of the 16,513 construction contracts for which awards were let throughout the 37 States east of the Rockies, 5,027, or approximately 30 per cent, were for alterations and additions to existing structures of all descriptions.

"On a valuation basis, alterations and additions during the quarter accounted for only 16 per cent of the total value of all construction awards, while on a floor-space basis somewhat less than 8 per cent of the new floor space involved in all contracts was for additions. A detailed examination of the first quarter's contract record shows that nonresidential building benefited most from alterations and additions whether measured from the standpoint of number of projects, floor space or contract values.

"Commercial buildings, principally offices and stores, and factory buildings, have a faster rate of obsolescence than most other structural types, and hence require more continuous modernization," the Architectural Record continues. "In the case of factory buildings, which are usually planned for specific industrial uses, large alterations may be and often are necessary when such space is to be converted to other industrial uses than those for which the building was originally designed.

"Of the value of all contracts awarded for commercial structures throughout the 37 Eastern States during the first quarter of 1932, 43 per cent was for alterations and additions. Factory alterations and additions accounted for 44 per cent of all contracts for this structural type. Hospitals and institutions showed 25 per cent for alterations and additions; educational, religious and memorial, social and recreational buildings each accounted for 17 per cent of their respective total contract values during the first quarter. Alterations and additions to public buildings represented 14 per cent of the value of all contracts for public buildings."

BUILDING TO HOUSE MARKET UNDER WAY

Kass Realty Concern Starts Work on $100,000 Structure.

Kass Realty Co., owners and builders, broke ground last week for a $100,000 operation located at the corner of Fifth street and Florida avenue northeast. The building is designed for five stores on the ground floor and twenty offices on the second, part of this office space to be used by the Union Market Terminal and the market association.

The sale of the ground was negotiated by Shannon & Luchs Co., who also have charge of the leasing of the building.

With the dismantling of Center Market, it became a civic necessity to provide an available place where the important wholesale and retail distribution of food products could be properly housed and the public conveniently served.

The site at Fifth street and Florida avenue northeast was selected as the most logical point for Union Market by reason of its accessibility and the opportunity to provide adequate parking facilities, something Center Market and old "Warehouse Row" did not have. Buildings of the most modern type have been erected, especially designed and equipped to meet the particular requirements of each business conducted in them.

In a very real sense, Union Market is a service center, where one can do all marketing for table commodities and luxuries under the most agreeable surroundings. There are acres of parking space with no parking restrictions or time penalties to be considered.

Paper Says Americans Buying British Babies

London (U.P.).—Certain Americans are "buying British babies like cloth over the counter," the Sunday Express said recently.

"The reason is that since the war the United States is eager to have British blood to improve her stock," the newspaper said, quoting the price for babes at from $175 to $350 each. The newspaper gave few details, but said wealthy Americans were making the purchases, insisting that the babies come from good families. "One man offered $3,500 for a really blue-blooded baby," the story said.

Court Decree Allows Paupers to Own Autos

Springfield, Ill. (A.P.).—Paupers aided by township funds in Illinois are not barred from owning and operating automobiles.

An opinion by Attorney General Oscar Carlstrom held that the automobiles so owned, however, should be employed for the purpose of seeking work or necessary duties and not for pleasure. The State official ruled that the township poor overseer could use his own judgment in deciding individual cases.

Salmon Jumps Into Boat.

Grants Pass, Oreg. (U.P.).—A large Chinook salmon actually leaped into the rowboat of J. Schwartz, of Klamath Falls, as he rowed down the Rogue River, near here. Schwartz leaped astride the fish and subdued it after taking a good thumping.

"SAFEST" OF VAULTS BEING CONSTRUCTED

Concrete, Steel and Water Will Protect New Bank of England.

London (U.P.).—"I want the new Bank of England made so impregnable that no one could even steal so much as half a sovereign from its vaults. Even the theft of that small sum would ruin our prestige."

That statement, made by Montagu Norman, governor of the Bank of England, is responsible for the mighty barricade of steel and cement being built 60 feet below the streets of London.

Norman's instructions are being carried out to the letter and the new vaults will withstand assault, fire, bombardment, dynamite and flood for the next 500 years. If any intruder even gets inside, he must face the danger of being drowned, shot or captured.

Cost About $2,500,000.

The new safes are costing £500,000 and will be the main feature of the new Bank of England Building, now half finished. All work has been carried out behind high barricades.

The outer doors of the safes are described as artillery proof. The outer shells are bronze while the cores are solid blocks of 3-inch steel.

All the "strong room" system rests on a three-foot bed of concrete reinforced with hardened steel rods, and covered with a layer of steel. The sides of the vaults and safes are protected in the same way. Architects are certain that no amount of tunnelling would ever permit access from below or from the sides.

Elevators to Vaults.

The only feasible access to the safes and vaults will be from above, through massive grille gates and steel doors, guarded, if necessary, by machine gunners. Inside these gates and doors is a deep shaft, with elevators, leading down to the level of the vaults.

In emergencies this shaft can be flooded, drowning intruders, with no danger of the water penetrating the strong rooms.

There are more strong grilles at the bottom of the shaft and the huge safe door weighs 25 tons. Not even the governor of the bank can open the safe door. The combination code of the lock is divided up, no one person knowing all of it.

Even inside the safe door there are innumerable steel doors to be opened before a single bar of gold could be removed from the rack on which it lies.

Sleep-Generating Machine Invented

Psychology Professor Also Admits Tired Feeling Helps Greatly.

Chicago (A.P.).—Counting sheep to bring sleep may be all right, but Prof. John B. Morgan, of Northwestern University, told his psychology class some better ways.

He demonstrated his recent invention, which works like a phonograph and emits a low, humming sound. It is intended to slow down breathing and soothe the nerves.

Here are some suggestions that go with the machine: Pinch the bridge of the nose to make the eyes relax; dismiss all thoughts except those about sleep; take even, deep breaths, allowing the chest to sag on the last; then relax.

Of course, the professor added, it helps a lot if you're tired.

HERE'S AN EXAMPLE

WHAT A MODERN HOME SHOULD BE

Model home of Burdett Stryker at 701 Nicholson St. N. W., the highest elevation in Marietta Park. The house is open and lighted. To see it, drive out Eighth, turn right at Nicholson, or take Fourteenth Street car marked Takoma, get off at Seventh and go north to Nicholson, or through Rock Creek Park east on Military Road and Concord Ave. For further informatin, call??

In the last ten years, home construction has been revolutionized—the house that would have suited you ten years ago would be obsolete today. Therefore, in looking for a home, confine your choice to those which have taken advantage of new improvements and offer you all the new comforts which mark the modern home.

Such a house is open and for sale by Burdett Stryker at 701 Nicholson St. N. W. It has eight large rooms, two baths, recreation room and built-in garage.

What proves it modern? Insulation against summer heat and winter cold, chromium fixtures, generous use of everlasting copper, complete calking and weather stripping, cheerful use of color in bathrooms and kitchen, and—most of all—the labor-saving and comfort-giving modern gas appliances. There is gas for heating, refrigeration, cooking and water heating—all in modern automatic appliances to save time and work, and insure a clean, comfortable, trouble-free home.

These are the things which mark a modern home and mark a builder who protects his reputation and his buyers by giving lasting value. Your purchase of a home is probably the most important investment you will ever make. When you buy an all-gas-convenience home you buy a home that will continue to be modern, continue to be comfortable, continue to have greater re-sale value. Since such a home costs no more, why even consider anything less?

STEEL PLANTS SEEK ADVANCE IN PRICES

Improved Automobile Buying Is Offset by Lighter Structural Awards.

New York, May 14 (A.P.).—Steel manufacturers are adopting a firmer attitude on prices, and, according to trade reports, the prospect is said to be for some advance in quotations for the third quarter.

Irregular operations, with no marked change in ingot production from the rate of 24 per cent of capacity, reflected continued quietness of demand in the past week.

Moderately improved buying of automobile sheets and slight increases in rail releases were offset by light structural awards and less active tin plate demand. The 15 per cent reduction in wages will have no effect on prices, it is said. Buying of pig iron remained restricted at unchanged prices.

Tin eased from the sharp advance of the previous week as the proposed drastic international curtailment of output failed to attract buying by large consuming interests. Demand was limited to small lots for immediate requirements.

Dull conditions prevailed in the lead market as consumers remained indifferent. Producers held steady although the undertone was slightly easier because of poor off-take. Further curtailment of output by one producer has been announced.

Zinc weakened as selling pressure increased and consumers withdrew, awaiting a more stable market. The price eased into new low record ground, and was followed by an announcement of a four-month shutdown by one producer.

Although Chinese asking prices for antimony were stiffened when inquiry was reported from Europe, domestic buyers remained indifferent and nominal quotations continued.

In the Youngstown district next week steel mill operations are expected to average approximately 25 per cent of capacity, unchanged from the past week.

April figures on building permits showed a marked improvement over March and afford ground for some encouragement, says Bradstreet's. The permits recorded a gain of 26.7 per cent over the previous month as against a normal April gain of 6 to 7 per cent.

The April total for 215 cities was $47,741,687, which compares with $37,-676,746 in March. The decrease from April last year was 68.6 per cent.

Contracts for heavy engineering construction in the past week had a total valuation of $24,949,000, the Engineering News-Record reports. The total compares with $54,458,000 as the weekly average value for May of last year.

No substantial gain in the volume of steel bookings is in sight for the current quarter, and hopes of manufacturers for improvement in operating results lie in the 15 per cent wage cut announced a week ago, according to current opinion in the steel trade.

Bond dealers are expecting an offering of $30,000,000 Consolidated Gas Co. 25-year 5 per cent bonds next week. The company's application for the issue is pending before the Public Service Commission. In the opinion of brokers the offering price will be around 97 to yield 5.22 per cent.

Business failures in April numbered 2,548 against 2,593 in March, and 2,152 in April, 1931, according to Bradstreet's. While the April total was smaller than a month ago the aggregate liabilities were somewhat larger, amounting to $124,364,000 as against $113,080,000. The April, 1931, liabilities amounted to $161,821,000.

Unfavorable dividend changes last week numbered 47, contrasting with 45 in the previous week, according to a compilation by the Standard Statistics Co. There were six favorable changes as compared with nine in the week before.

The decline in bank stocks during the past week raised the average dividend yield of sixteen representative issues to 9.91 per cent, a record level, so far as the statistics of recent years are concerned. The highest average yield reported last year was 9.84 per cent on December 17.

Several important corporations will hold dividend meetings next week and Wall street is prepared for at least a few unfavorable announcements. Particular interest centers in the meeting of American Telephone & Telegraph directors, although the consensus in the financial district is that the regular quarterly disbursement of $2.25 will be ordered.

Exchange Seeking Shorts by States

New Request Is Made for Data on Tomorrow's Closing Reports Later.

New York, May 14 (A.P.).—The New York Stock Exchange has again requested its members to submit information showing the geographical distribution of short sellers.

In an order to members today the exchange requested information as of the close of business May 16 showing the total number of short accounts in each State of the United States and in each foreign country. The reports are to be made not later than May 23.

No information was forthcoming from exchange officials as to the purpose of this information. This is the second such request in recent weeks, and is in addition to the regular reports on the volume of short selling.

Brokerage quarters have been inclined to surmise that the exchange wished the information in connection with the senatorial investigation of exchange practices.

By JOHN L. COOLEY.

New York, May 14 (A.P.).—Little change occurred in the week-end security markets today. Stocks sagged and so did bonds. Losses were somewhat smaller for shares, but evidence that the downward movement might be halted without some fresh stimulant was lacking.

Stocks dropped in the first hour, when many favorites unveiled new low quotations. They steadied later, probably under short covering, this reducing losses to a general fractional range. Selling continued to be rather specialized, affecting principally rails, utilities and some merchandising issues.

Woolworth and Eastman ran into a weak market, although both succeeded in reducing extreme losses of 2⅜ and 2 points, respectively. American Telephone, whose dividend meeting comes soon, broke 1¼ to 94¼, the lowest in many years, before meeting much support. Standard Oil of New Jersey obviously suffered from President Teagle's statement that dividends could not be continued indefinitely out of surplus.

Santa Fe Reacts.

Santa Fe and Union Pacific reacted a point or more, the latter selling at the lowest since 1899. Consolidated Gas, North American, Western Union and American Water Works also established new minimums. United States Steel halved a half point decline and traded quietly; neither was there much activity in American Can. Sales totaled 600,100 shares.

In the absence of important news developments, Wall street had nothing but the market's own action on which to base its opinions. Brokerage houses have been somewhat discomfited by this abrupt retreat which has emphasized so sharply the lack of buying interest.

They are more discouraged, however, by the weak bond market. Some hopes for at least a steady investment market had been kindled recently, but these have been shaken by the current downswing, and it is pointed out that stocks face heavy odds when bonds are being liquidated.

Key to Confidence.

Most financial observers agree that the key to confidence rests in the disposition of issues now pending at Washington, and the Senate's tax bill debate will be closely followed.

Also, the three-point relief plan appears to be a subject of considerable confusion, and many bankers find it impossible to believe that courage can reassert itself until such uncertainties are cleared up. One of today's rumors said that "constructive news" was likely to originate at the National Capital over the week-end, but just what this might be was not mentioned.

Steel operations are subject to much irregularity. Price stability now faces a new test in the 15 per cent wage reduction, for efforts to obtain concessions, on the theory that some of the saving should be passed on to consumers, seem probable. Nevertheless, Wall street believes the industry will stoutly resist such requests.

The headliner in next week's list of dividend meetings is American Telephone & Telegraph Co. What action is likely has not been indicated, although there have been reports that another "regulator" of $2.25 will be declared. This view is supported by indications that earnings, although under dividend requirements, are running at about the rate of the first quarter, when they amounted to $2.07 a share.

Another prominent meeting will be that of Du Pont's directors. In view of General Motors' recent cut, brokers are forecasting a reduction by Du Pont and a $2.50 annual basis is being mentioned as likely.

Bond Rally Fails.

Although the bond market attempted a feeble rally near the close of today's brief session, the vitality was lacking and the average for 60 corporate loans again recorded a new low figure for the year.

The United States Government list, however, was comparatively steady after exhibiting early uncertainty. All of the Liberties closed fractionally higher, as did most of the Treasuries. Investors were still somewhat nervous because of the vagueness of the administration's plans for relieving unemployment by inaugurating new public works projects. In some quarters it was believed that new bond issues would be necessary, but in others the view was that the financial angle could be handled by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation underwriting various approved ventures.

Railroad bonds were still suffering from liquidation, although they were not quite as soft as recently. Losses of from 1 to 3 or more points were suffered by some liens of Atchison, Boston & Maine, Chesapeake Corporation, Burlington, St. Paul, Chicago & Northwestern, Rock Island, Great Northern, Illinois Central, New York Central, Northern Pacific, Pennsylvania, Southern, Union Pacific and Wabash. Most of the Baltimore & Ohio and Missouri Pacific loans retained fair gains.

There were few important changes among the utilities and industrials. Columbia Gas loans were heavy, as were those of Western Union, Replogle Steel, National Radiator, Tobacco Products and Postal Telegraph. National Dairy Products 5¼s lost 2 points and Paramount-Famous-Lasky and Paramount-Publix bonds were weak.

Foreign loans were mixed: The Australians were steady, as were the Columbians, British and Italian. French 7½s eased and German government 5½s and 7s were off ¾ to 1 point. The Austrians sagged on reports of a forthcoming moratorium.

Sales totaled $6,235,000 par value.

Curb Declines Smaller.

The curb market drifted to still lower levels today, but there was little urgent selling, and price changes of the leaders were generally confined to fractions.

Stocks opened soft and traders maintained an apathetic attitude throughout the brief session. The turnover approximated 80,000 shares, the smallest Saturday's aggregate for several weeks.

The utilities, as a whole, continued in the unpopular class. Electric Bond & Share held its loss to ⅜ of a point, although the 5 per cent preferred stock dropped 6½ on a single sale. Niagara Hudson Power and Cities Service held to their previous quotations. Commonwealth Edison was again somewhat heavy, showing a loss of 1½ points.

U. S. Deficit Absorbs Credit Of Country on Huge Scale

The following article, by Ralph West Robey, financial editor of the New York Evening Post, is reprinted by special permission of the author:

By RALPH WEST ROBEY.

At present the deficit of the Federal Government is absorbing the lending power of our financial system at almost three times as great a rate as the whole business structure absorbed bank credit during the inflationary period of 1927-1929.

The indicated Federal deficit for the fiscal year ending June 30 is about $3,000,000,000. The deficit already has exceeded $2,-500,000,000 and during the first ten days of this month has been increasing some $18,000,000 a day. For the year as a whole the average daily increase in the deficit has been about $8,500,000.

Bank Credit Growth.

Between June 30, 1927, and June 29, 1929, the total loans and investments of all banks in the United States increased $4,-724,000,000, or at a daily average rate of approximately $6,500,-000. This was the period, it is well to emphasize, which is now recognized as one of great credit inflation. It was the end of the period in which the credit that led to the collapse of 1929 was extended.

Nevertheless we now have the Government imposing an even greater burden upon the banking system than that imposed by our whole business and financial structure during those years. The aggregate of loans and investments of the commercial banks is not increasing by an amount equal to the deficit of the Government, it is true, but this is because of liquidation in other directions, rather than because the Government is not absorbing bank funds by this amount.

Government Bonds in Banks.

Recently almost the entire amount of Government borrowing has been taken by the banking system of the country. The terms under which the Treasury obligations have been offered to the public practically have assured that this would be the case. Gradually, therefore, our banks are becoming water-logged with Government obligations.

The business structure of this country can not afford to have a continuation of this policy. It is absolutely essential not only to business recovery but to the safety of the entire financial system that the Federal Government balance its budget and stop making such great demands upon the banking structure.

Copper Prices Dip To Record Lows

Domestic Metal Offered at 5 1-2 Cents; Foreign 5 5-8 Per Pound.

New York, May 14 (A.P.).—Copper prices today decended to new depths. Following a decline in the domestic price to 5½ cents a pound yesterday, some custom smelters were reported to have offered the metal in the foreign market at 5⅝ cents a pound, or ⅝ of a cent below the former export price.

While the official price for foreign shipments, as established by Copper Exporters, Inc., still remains at 6¼ cents a pound, custom smelters, under special arrangements, have for some time been offering the metal abroad at 6 cents a pound.

The continued slump in copper prices is generally attributed to the diminishing demand, especially in foreign markets. Producers are expressing disappointment that manufacturers have not started to accumulate the metal in anticipation of a 4-cent copper tariff. One of the reasons for the apparent indifference, however, is said to be the fact that most of the fabricators already have large stocks on hand.

Brokers Look to Capital For Stock Market Key

New York, May 14 (A.P.).—Some brokers believed that the progress of the tax bill in the Senate would be an important market influence over the next few days.

In virtually all financial quarters it was agreed that Washington's disposal of issues now pending held the key to confidence and that Wall street's quest for constructive news must center in the National Capital.

Receiver Named For M.-K. Pipeline

Chicago Lawyer Told to Investigate Company in Delaware.

Chicago, May 14 (A.P.).—Thurlow G. Essington, Chicago attorney, was appointed receiver today for the Missouri-Kansas Pipeline Company. Mr. Essington was given full powers by the Federal Court which appointed him to investigate affairs of the corporation in cooperation with receivers in charge of the properties in the State courts of Delaware.

The court order stated, however, that if the Delaware courts do not agree to the receivership instituted here, then Mr. Essington shall be sole receiver.

Frank P. Parish, president, and other officials of the company have been indicted on charges of using the mails to defraud in connection with financing and stock sales of the company.

LISTED STOCKS DROP 7 BILLION IN VALUE

Statistics Vary on Average of Lows Compared With Previous Slumps.

By CLAUDE A. JAGGER.

New York, May 14 (A.P.).—How low is the stock market? After more than two and one-half years of painful declines this question would seem imperatively to need answering.

But different series of figures tell different stories. One series of industrial share price averages, which dates back to 1897, is currently hovering close to the now levels of 1914 and 1907. Another, which dates back to 1911, is still well above the lows of even the comparatively recent post-war slump of 1921.

The total value of all listed shares on the New York Stock Exchange is currently close to $20,000,000,000, but this tabulation goes back only to 1925. The current valuation is some $7,000,000,000 under the 1925 low level, but since that time the number of listed shares has increased from roughly 430,000,000 to more than 1,300,000,000, so comparison can scarcely be made.

Task Made Difficult.

The vast increase in the volume of outstanding securities, and the numerous changes, such as stock split-ups and mergers, as well as the growth of some companies and the wane of others, make comparisons of price levels over a long range decidedly difficult.

The industrial shares are presumably the best group to take at this time for purposes of comparison, for the utilities have become a major group only since the World War, and the rails, a dominant group in pre-war days, have been nosed out of first place by other groups in later years.

The Dow-Jones price average of industrial shares, now based on 30 issues, closed Friday at 53.2, which makes an interesting comparison with the low points of the past three major slumps. It is some 10 points under the low of the post-war depression of 1931, but it coincides exactly with the low figure of 1914, when the market was swamped with frightened selling by the outbreak of the World War. And it is but a fraction of a point above the low reached in 1907.

Standard Statistics Index.

The Standard Statistics weekly index of 351 industrials, which has been carried back to 1918, has touched a low at 38.6, or well under the 1921 low of 44.9. The New York Times price average of 25 industrials, however, still holds several points above the 1921 low, and far above the 1914 bottom. This series runs back to 1911.

Price averages carried back over a long period vary considerably in view of different trends of stocks used, the necessity of occasional substitutions and other adjustments to compensate for corporate changes.

The utilities, as based on Standard Statistics weekly index of 37, are apparently back only to the levels of 1923.

The rails, however, have fallen to levels not shown in the Dow-Jones series going back to the 1890s, and apparently are at levels unexperienced since the depression of the 1870s.

Wall street hears that operations of Paramount-Publix Corporation during April continued on a unprofitable basis, and that another deficit is likely for the second quarter.

SECURITY MARKETS WIPE OUT ADVANCE

Previous Week's Gains Lost as Selling Drags List Into Bottom Ruts.

New York, May 14 (A.P.).—After wavering for a few days, the stock market again slipped into its downhill rut this week. The recovery of the previous week, which greeted the more aggressive leadership on the part of the Federal administration in an effort to expedite balancing the budget, was completely lost.

Selling was in meager volume—so small that in ordinary times it would have been unimportant— but what with the extreme uncertainty and timidity of buyers, it was sufficient to depress prices to new bottom levels for the 2½-year down swing.

Despite the bipartisan efforts in the Senate to balance the budget, financial quarters remained nervous over Federal fiscal affairs. Furthermore, the week's business statistics generally proved disappointing. Regardless of the feeling in various quarters that many securities were on the bargain shelf, the courage to buy was almost utterly lacking.

Adverse Dividends Blamed.

Formal omission of New York Central's dividends, and reduction of Union Pacific's quarterly payment to $1.50 from $2.50, while wholly in keeping with expectations, were followed by marked weakness throughout the railroad division. A number of the leading industrials held up fairly well, but new soft spots were uncovered from day to day, reflecting new worries over dividends, or necessitous liquidation of individual accounts.

The price index of 90 leading issues ended the week at 43.7, or a drop of 4 points, net, for the period. The previous low of the cycle had been 45, registered on May 5. Since the middle of April, the market was held to a fairly narrow range. It was as low as 47.5 on April 13. The most active session of the past week was Thursday, when only 917,800 shares were traded.

The bond market also softened, as the rail liens gave way easily. The price index of 60 representative corporate issues closed the period at 62.9, a net loss of 1.8, and a substantial decline for this index. In the past month the bond market has finally dipped substantially below the bottom level of last December, which, as measured by this index, was 68.5.

Rail Holders Disappointed.

Holders of the rail securities have obviously been disappointed by the continued low level of the movement of revenue freight. Despite wage reductions and operating economies, many of the major systems are finding it impossible to earn their fixed charges with the current volume of business. Hope rests either in a pickup in traffic or further drastic operating economies and curtailment of service. Some observers hold that the rails may still go far in reducing their expenses, but it is pointed out that the process takes time and may involve substantial curtailment of service.

The United States Government bonds eased for a time, as the financial district was somewhat perplexed by the $2,000,000,000 relief plan advanced in Washington. When this amount was cut to $1,500,000,000, however, and it was explained that it might not require issuance of Government securities, and that funds would be spent largely on self-liquidating projects, the market for the Federal issues recovered. The Federal Reserve System continued its active buying of the Federals, adding $98,000,000 to its portfolio in the latest week.

While the Federal Reserve credit expansion program has not yet succeeded in checking deflation, some bankers explained that important results could scarcely be looked for before mid-June. Immediate results furthermore may have been thwarted by taxation uncertainties and the renewed outflow of gold. The Bank of England cut its rate to 2½ from 3 per cent, but the New York Reserve rate was maintained at 3.

Chemical Industry Seasonally Dull.

Developments during April and early this month along the line of further readjustments of production in the direction of a more profitable operating basis on the part of the consuming industries caused the demand for chemicals as a whole to be characterized as dull.

In general there is a seasonal aspect to chemical consumption. There is also the ultimate consumer reaction made manifest at various times of the year in their demands for products such as paints, medicinals and agricultural chemicals. As each of these seasonal demands was about to materialize, optimism was high. With the exception of the demand for medicinals, however, each season closed leaving the producers rather disheartened.

The medicinal and toilet industry has not only had a fairly satisfactory demand, but optimism is particularly prevalent at the present time among manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers. Retailers are particularly rejoicing in the movement started by the chain stores to put an end to profitless selling by gradually raising prices, which through severe competition had been cut below cost. Wholesalers are gratified over the report that manufacturers who sold in 1931 to retailers suffered the heaviest losses, the average running approximately 55 per cent in contrast to a loss of 25 per cent on merchandise sold to wholesalers. As to manufacturers in these lines, the 21 leading producers' total for 1931 was 5 per cent over the 1929 record. This strong position, however, was due not only to a reversal from quantity to quality distribution, but likewise to the advantage of lower raw material costs.

Formation of a general protective committee for holders of Hungarian government external bonds is recommended by the Institute of National Finance, in a statement issued today outlining Hungary's financial position. The institute is conducted by the Investment Bankers Association of America in cooperation with the New York University.

Building activity during April showed an increase of 19.7 per cent over March with a volume of $52,079,621 in building permits issued, S. W. Straus & Co., Inc., reported. Despite this increase over the preceding month the April permits were 30 per cent below the same month last year.

Bank Suspensions.

New York, May 14.—There were 12 bank suspensions during the past week compared with 14 in the previous week, according to the "American Banker." Seven banks reported during this period. Total suspensions for the year to date number 635, affecting deposit liabilities of approximately $280,000,000, it is stated.

BANKERS PLAN RADIO TALKS ON FINANCES

Program to Last 6 Months, If Association Approves at June Meeting.

By THOMAS M. CAHILL.

Having as its theme, "Finance, the Foundation of Enterprise," plans for a weekly radio broadcast lasting six months or longer, if found popular, will be inaugurated by the District of Columbia Bankers Association late in the summer, subject to approval by the association at its annual convention in June and its member banks at a meeting to be called shortly after.

The plan is that of the association's advertising committee and has the unanimous indorsement of the committee membership, it was announced yesterday following a meeting of this group. The purpose of the campaign is fourfold: to increase public confidence in the future economic outlook; develop good will for the banks; educate the public to an understanding of the bankers' problems and policies and develop a more extensive use of bank services.

The program, if approved, will provide a series of dramatic episodes dealing wth national history, particularly that of the National Capital, and emphasizing the importance of banking as a factor in the city's growth. The sketches will be followed by talks by bankers, merchants, civic and industrial leaders revealing the community interest between business and finance.

Meeting Opens June 9.

The convention at which the proposal will be submitted by the advertising committee is the fourteenth annual gathering of the bankers' association, and will be held at The Homestead, Hot Springs, Va., June 9-12. Merle Thorpe, editor of Nation's Business, was announced yesterday as the second convention speaker, Harry J. Haas, Philadelphia, president of the American Bankers' Association, being the first noted.

Mr. Haas will address the District bankers at the first day's session and Mr. Thorpe at the second day's. Mr. Thorpe is now attending the annual convention of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States at Los Angeles and has not yet informed the program committee of the subject of his talk.

Building Permit.

With building permits having a valuation of $1,085,145, the District of Columbia for April was last on a list of twelve leading States. Washington, D. C., was sixth on a list of 25 leading cities, according to a compilation just prepared by S. W. Straus & Co., Inc. New York State and city led both lists.

Building activity during April, the report states, showed an increase of 19.7 per cent over the previous month, with a volume of $52,079,621 in permits issued in 568 cities and towns in the country. Despite the increase, April permits were 30 per cent below those of the month last year in value.

Annual Spring Prom.

The annual spring prom for the membership of Washington Chapter, American Institute of Banking, will be held at Columbia Country Club Tuesday evening, from 10 to 1 o'clock. The entertainment committee, under the direction of Willard G. Barker, vice president, Morris Plan Bank, is arranging an interesting program of entertainment.

It is expected that a large portion of the chapter's membership will be present, as these affairs are becoming more popular every year. There will be dancing, with the first Night Hawks' Band providing the music, and there will be favors for all. In addition, there will be bridge with prizes provided for each table.

WHEAT PRICES DROP, DESPITE SOVIET AIDS

Washington Outlook Blamed as Selling Rush Prevails; Other Grains Lose.

Chicago, May 14 (A.P.).—Disturbed by proposed financial enactments at Washington and by instability of the New York stock market, wheat values underwent abrupt tumbles today.

Falling to more than 8 cents a bushel under April top prices, wheat showed almost complete absence of any aggressive buying. Pressure to sell was general, and in addition one of the largest professional traders here was reported to be letting go of a big line of wheat holdings recently estimated to total 6,000,000 bushels.

Wheat closed nervous, ¾ to 1 cent under yesterday's finish, with corn varying from ½ cent off to ¼ cent up, oats, ⅜ to ½ cent down, and provisions unchanged to a setback of 15 cents.

Bulls vainly tried to make capital of reports that Rusia was working with feverish activity to condition the Trans-Siberian Railroad to facilitate troop movements to Manchuria.

Little Headway Made.

Little headway was accomplished either with evidence that notwithstanding holidays abroad, export business in North American wheat today had reached a fair total. Gaining much more attention among traders, were assertions that a restoration of confidence in financial circles was needed before the wheat market could respond vigorously to crop damage developments or any other stimulating influence.

Tending to accelerate wheat market downturns were generally favorable weather conditions over domestic winter crop sections, together with reports that seeding of spring wheat was being rapidly completed. On the other hand, foreign news indicated poor crop prospects in Hungary, Poland and Roumania, while Spain was said to be dickering with Argentina for a large amount of wheat. New export business in North American wheat included United States hard winters, which appeared to be attracting more notice from European buyers on account of relatively low prices.

Corn and oats sympathized with wheat weakness, but on the declines corn demand improved. There was buying of July corn credited to cash houses.

Provisions gave way under scattered selling and dropped to a new low for the season and since 1897.

Business Barometer

By LYNNE M. LAMM

SEASONAL headway is being made in the retail and wholesale trade except in certain industrial communities, where operations are low. Reports indicate that retail merchandising has shown a greater progress than wholesale, with particular activity in moderate priced lines. Jobbers and wholesalers are anticipating increased sales in the near future as a reaction from the present retail movement. Reports from the Middle West indicate some increased activity, both in industrial operations and general business.

Automobile Production Steady.

Passenger automobile production is maintaining a fairly steady pace at the present time with no marked change in volume. The Ford Co.'s manufacturing difficulties apparently are being gradually removed and the output gaining.

There is a slight upward trend in sales reported, which, however, is far below seasonal expansion. Following an upturn at the beginning of April, largely attributable to activity in the plant of one of the leading producers, passenger car production showed little change until the third week of the month when a sharp drop occurred, followed by the more recent increase.

The decrease was partly attributable to the sluggish retail situation and partly to manufacturing delays. During the final ten days or so of April a fairly gradual increase in output was reported, but the gain was below what it should have been and reflected the continued inactivity of the market.

April brought disappointing car sales showing in spite of the great spring selling drive by the industry, which has encountered stubborn sales resistance. The failure of the market to show any pronounced upward trend has prevented companies from proceeding with plans for substained increases in output.

Throughout April truck production and sales showed little change and remained at low levels. This has been continued into the present month and in the face of a persistent light demand.

Latest official production figures are for March and they show the total number of automobiles produced in the United States was 118,959, of which 99,325 were passenger cars, 19,560 were trucks and 74 were taxicabs. In the same month of last year a total of 396,388 cars were produced, of which 329,501 were passenger cars, 65,466 were trucks and 1,421 taxicabs.

Airline Traffic Bright Spot.

Aircraft production and deliveries, both military and civil, indicate no fluctuation from the low levels of recent weeks, but airline traffic remains a bright spot in the picture, though mail contracts still are the major source of income to operators.

For the first three months of this year there were 134 civil and commercial craft manufactured. Practically all of these planes were delivered. During the same period of last year 342 planes were manufactured. In the 1931 period a few factories were maintaining production schedules which have since been almost completely abandoned, planes now being built on order only.

Deliveries of military types to the Government in the first three months of this year numbered 219, compared with 302 for the same period last year.

Airline operations continued on a favorable basis. The latest available data show that 30 companies operating scheduled airlines in the continental United States carried 33,532 passengers in March, compared with 25,960 and 24,774, respectively, for January and February. The statistics show also that 3,782,691 miles were flown in March by these companies and 82,953 pounds of express carried. From all indications the April figures will be considerably in excess of those for March.

Packers' Business Fair.

Meat consumption last year and so far this year has been slightly higher than during the same periods of the previous years, while prices have been lower.

However, during the last two months the wholesale prices of meats have shown a tendency toward stabilization. Stocks are not burdensome.

The outlook for the packers appears to be moderately rosy, the reports indicate. Cattle supplies in March were relatively small, but, with an additional market day in the month this year, Federally inspected slaughter was only fractionally smaller than in March a year ago. The cumulative slaughter for the first three months of this year was approximately 1 per cent larger than last year's, but slightly smaller than two years ago. The outlook is for a moderate supply of cattle for the three-month period from April to June, inclusive, though probably not quite as large as slaughter in the corresponding period last year, when receipts were heavy.

Hog marketings in March showed a seasonal reduction from the previous month, but the number of hogs at Federally inspected plants in March this year exceeded that of a year ago by 4 per cent and that of March two years ago by 8 per cent.

COTTON FLUCTUATES TO 1 POINT LOWER

July Contracts Close at 5.59; Southern Selling Blamed; Holidays Abroad.

New York, May 14 (A.P.).—Cotton prices fluctuated within a range of 4 or 5 points in a comparatively quiet market during today's trading.

Some local and southern selling on favorable weather reports was absorbed by covering or trade buying and after selling off to 5.56 early, July closed at 5.59. The final tone was steady, with the market net unchanged to 1 point lower.

The opening was steady at a decline of 1 to 2 points and active months showed net losses of 2 to 4 points during the middle of the morning under week-end liquidation, while there was a little southern selling, and some local selling which may have been inspired by the indifferent showing of the stock market.

Offerings were light, however, while there seemed to be rather a steady demand from the trade, presumably to fix prices. This buying was sufficient to steady the market and closing quotations showed rallies of 2 to 3 points from the lowest on most positions.

Consumption Is Lower.

The report of the Census Bureau placing domestic consumption of lint cotton for April at 367,280 bales against 488,655 for March and 508,691 for April, 1931, was slightly under expectations.

The weather map evidently made a very favorable impression on sentiment, while the week-end forecast was regarded as pointing to a continuance of satisfactory conditions in most sections of the belt, but while this may have accounted for some early selling, a good part of the business aside from the trade buying was attributed to week-end evening-up.

Owing to the Whitsuntide holidays, the Liverpool market was closed and will not reopen for business until Tuesday morning. The continental markets and Bombay markets were also closed yesterday.

The amount of cotton on shipboard at United States ports awaiting clearance at the end of the week was estimated at 111,000 bales, against 78,000 last year and 75,000 two years ago.

New Coast Guard Seaplane Has Wide Cruising Range

The first of a fleet of seaplane patrol boats to be used by the Coast Guard along the Atlantic seaboard arrives in Washington. The big ship was built by the General Aviation Corporation.

Two-Engined Ship Carries Crew of Four; Designed for Rescue Work.

With the arrival recently at the Anacostia Naval Air Station of a new large two-engined flying patrol boat, to be used by the Coast Guard along the Atlantic seaboard, attention has been directed to the work of airplanes in the patrolling of our ocean boundaries.

The ship received is the first of an order of five which will soon be placed in service and represents the most modern equipment that could be obtained for such work. Six older and smaller planes are at the present time being flown by the Coast Guard in emergency rescue and patrol work.

The advantages of a patrolling airplane over a patrol boat are outstanding. Besides being able to fly at a speed of 100 miles an hour, while a ship can only cruise at an average of about 15, a plane is able to survey considerable additional area from its high altitude.

It has been estimated that the new ships will be able to cover 1,000 square miles an hour, and they carry fuel for twelve hours' flying.

Each plane is equipped with sending and receiving radio apparatus for both code and voice reception. Contact is thus maintained with ships at sea who frequently are able to give helpful information in cases of emergency.

A crew of four men consisting of pilot, copilot, mechanic and radio man is carried in each of the new ships.

Bases are maintained at Gloucester, Mass.; Cape May, N. J., and Miami, Fla. From these points the ships radiate on their trips which are principally errands of mercy.

Reserve Corps Notes

By STAFF SERGT. A. S. DE AGRO.

All previous instructions from the War Department relating to suspension of appointments in certain sections of the Officers Reserve Corps have been rescinded and the following recent instructions to all corps area commanders and chiefs of arms and services are substituted.

With the exception of applicants eligible and qualified through the Reserve Officers Training Corps and the Citizens Military Training Camps, appointments in grades, sections and groups, as indicated, are now suspended. Judge Advocate General's Department, Chemical Warfare Service and Military Police Corps are closed for all grades in both the corps area and arms and service group; the Adjutant General's Department, Finance Department, Dental Corps, Medical Administrative Corps and Sanitary Corps closed for all grades in the arms and service group only; Signal Corps and Quartermaster Corps are closed in all grades, except second lieutenants, in both the corps area and arms and service group.

The restriction upon appointments in these sections apply equally to transfers with the exception that they will not be held applicable for transfers to the Adjutant General's Department and to the Judge Advocate General's Department which have been atuhorized in previous instructions from the War Department and still remain in effect.

Medical Corps Requirements.

Pending revision of the regulations governing appointments and promotions in the Medical Department Reserve, first lieutenants of the Medical and Dental Corps will be examined in the following subjects in order to qualify for certificate of capacity for the same grade and section: Administration, military discipline, courtesies and customs of the service, military sanitation and first aid, organization of the Army, organization of the Medical Department supply and mess management, military law covering the law of military offenses and courts-martial, and defense against chemical warfare.

Second lieutenants of the Sanitary and Veterinary Corps will be required to qualify in the following subjects: Military discipline, courtesies and customs of the service, administration and military sanitation and first aid.

District Reserve officers holding commissions in the Officers' Reserve Corps in a status ineligible for assignment, active duty training or promotion in peace time, will be interested to know that they can apply for appointment in another section of the Officers' Reserve Corps without first resigning, provided they meet the requirements of the regulations governing transfers; a certificate of capacity for the grade and new section being required in each case.

Staff Assignments.

Local Reserve Headquarters announces new assignments to the regimental staff of the two Field Artillery Reserve regiments of the District of Columbia. The 313th Field Artillery, 75-mm. gun, horse-drawn, is commanded by Col. Leroy W. Herron, of 3111 Garfield street northwest; Lieut. Col. Percy B. McCoy, of 3503 Morrison street northwest, executive officer; Capt. Frank W. McCarthy, of Berwyn, Md., adjutant; First Lieut. Fred E. Wilson, of 1920 S street northwest, intelligence officer; Capt. Jesse E. Porter, of 101 U street northwest, plans and training officer; Capt. Ferguson Fague, of 616 Seventh street northwest, supply officer; First Lieut. Louis G. Carmack, jr., of 2910 Q street northwest, liaison officer; First Lieut. Thomas F. Collins, of 324 H street northeast, reconnaissance officer, and Second Lieut. Burton O. Bush, of 1301 Ridge place southeast, assistant plans and training officer.

Col. E. Francis Riggs, of Green Hill, Hyattsville, Md., who commands the 15th Field Artillery, 155-mm. Howitzers, has on his staff the following District Reserve officers: Lieut. Col. Wellstood White, of the University Club, executive officer; Capt. Sidney P. Simpson, of 800 Southern Building, adjutant; First Lieut. Clarence E. Geiger, of 4007 Connecticut avenue, intelligence officer; First Lieut. Joseph E. Gallery, of 718 Eleventh street northwest, liaison officer; First Lieut. Ralph A. Creel, of 406 High street, Chevy Chase, Md., reconnaissance officer, and Second Lieut. Northcutt Ely, of the Westchester Apartments, assistant plans and training officer.

C. M. T. C. Training.

When the reserve officers assumed the conduct of the citizens' military training camps three years ago, both the regular Army and the Citizens Military Training Camps Association were rather skeptical of the possible results. But the reserve officers have done exceedingly well, and the popularity of the camps, as evidenced by the number of applications received, has steadily increased. As a result, the C. M. T. camps have become more and more the responsibility of the Officers Reserve Corps. The Citizens' military training camp is not only a medium for the training of the reserve corps, it is also a most valuable source of supply of officer material. New regulations provide that successful graduates of the blue course, citizens' military training camps, may be appointed upon the recommendation of an examining board, in the same manner as any other eligible applicant. Further, such graduates are exempt from military knowledge tests in certain subjects and the tests under ability qualifications.

In the other subjects, in addition to the usual physical, moral and general educational qualifications, the applicant may take written tests or he may take the corresponding extension subcourses. By completing this work before graduation from the blue course, the applicant can receive commission in the Officers Reserve Corps at the end of the last camp without further examination.

Corps area headquarters Baltimore, Md., comprising the States of Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia and District of Columbia, reports that 11,849 applications for enrollment in the citizens' military training camps have been received. The quota assigned the Third Corps Area is less than 5,000, and the objective is 6,000.

The standing of the District of Washington area is as follows:

	Quota.	Received.
Washington, D. C.	206	204
Charles County, Md.	8	3
Montgomery Co., Md.	18	14
Prince Georges Co., Md.	21	21

Inactive Training.

Four instructional conferences have been scheduled for District Reserve officers for the coming week. The 428th Infantry will meet tomorrow night. "Ceremonies and Orientation for Summer Camp" will be the subject to be presented by Maj. Andres Lopez, who will also lecture on the same subject to officers of the 320th Infantry who will meet May 17. "Service of the Piece and Instruction in Calisthenics" will be the subject of the conference for the Field Artillery officers. The meeting will take place in the Fort Myer Riding Hall Wednesday evening, May 18, and will be conducted by Maj. John M. McDowell. Reserve officers will turn out in uniform, field service, consisting of shirts, OD, breeches and boots. Maj. H. C. Dagley, the unit instructor of the Second Squadron, 306th Cavalry, will instruct District Calvary officers in "Target Designation," May 19.

Offered Reappointment.

The following District officers have been tendered reappointments in the Officers Reserve Corps by the War Department: As first lieutenants, Medical Corps, Ambrose H. Cook, of 3219 Northampton street northwest; Raphael N. Manganro, of 1115 Fourth street northeast, and John E. Virnstein, of 1206 Pennsylvania avenue southeast.

The following have been tendered reappointments as second lieutenants of Infantry: James S. Ruby, of the United States Soldiers' Home; William A. Tarver, of 1855 Calvert street northwest; Charles M. McKnight, United States Patent Office, and Morrill Tomlin, of 72 M street northwest; Second Lieut. Edward G. Trigg, of the United States Department of Agriculture, has been tendered reappointment in the Veterinary Corps Reserve.

Charles Francis Sullivan, of 157 Adams street northwest, has been commissioned a second lieutenant of the Infantry Reserve.

Takeoffs and Landings

By HARRIS B. HULL

THE rights of airplane pilots to collective bargaining, a privilege they do not have at the present time, in disputes with airline operators, is the subject of an interesting piece of legislation now being considered on Capitol Hill.

Representative LaGuardia has introduced a bill to amend the railway labor act of 1926 to allow the fliers to appeal their disputes in the same way that railway trainmen and engineers now do, that is, bring them before the United States Board of Mediation.

The bill undoubtedly was inspired by the recent Century pilots' argument, in which wages were cut and the fliers were told to take the cut or leave.

To date the hearings have been going very favorably for the pilots' interests. They have secured the support of the railway groups and have had able lawyers tell the committee that "there is no doubt that it was the intention of the authors of the railway act to include pilots."

In all probability the measure will be favorably reported out of the committee. But this is not the end. It must go to the House and then the Senate, and with the present condition of the calendar it is difficult to say when it will receive attention.

But the Active Airline Pilots Association is pushing the bill. It hopes to get it through without major difficulty.

There is little doubt that the pilots are entitled to this collective representation and hearing. Theirs is not an easy business, and it is not to the best interests of commerce that they be forced to fly at wages arbitrarily set by the operators.

But it appears to me that classifying the pilots under the head of railway engineers and trainmen is just one more step in taking the romance out of this flying business. Pretty soon they will give the copilot a long oil can and a greasy cap and have him look over the ship when it lands. But it is probably to the best interests of all concerned that they do entirely eliminate the old "superman" theory of the pilot. Lots more people will be riding the airlines when they do.

THE eighth main frame of the duralumin skeleton of the U. S. S. Macon, sister ship of the Akron, has been placed in position, and the huge Navy ship is now 460 feet long. It will be 785 when completed.

It is expected that the new dirigible will be ready for trial flights around January 1, 1933. After its formal acceptance by the Navy the Macon will be stationed at Sunnydale, Calif., where new dock is now under construction.

American Airways has a new way for their executives to keep in touch with their flying activities. A map of their lines is installed in their main offices in Chicago. Each airport is indicated on the map by an electric bulb. When a plane lands a radio message is received at the airport where a telephone operator plugs in the light on the map showing that the ship has arrived. Thus the busy executives and the operations department are able to see how many planes are en route each way and their relative positions.

THE Army Air Corps have found another use for an airplane. They go out and trap mosquitoes in them. In the Hawaiian Islands the mosquitoes are very numerous, so Army fliers have attached traps to the wings of some large bombers and go out and get specimens for the board of health. The specimens are then shipped to Washington, where the health heads tell the people out on the Army post what kinds of mosquitoes have been biting them. I always said these flying machines were useful.

Negotiating a difficult forced landing near Selfridge Field recently, Lieut. William C. McDonald, of the Ninety-fourth Pursuit Squadron, got down all right and signaled an anxious group of fliers that all was well and to go on home without him. His ship repaired, he started to taxi to an end of the field for a take-off when the right wheel of the ship dropped in a hole, broke both spars of the right wing, damaged the propeller and generally strained the ship.

ROCKWELL FIELD, Calif., where many early aviation records were made, is to be abandoned by the War Department. Among the records accredited to Rockwell are: World's first bomb dropping experiments, April, 1914; the first jump in a parachute from an airplane, July 4, 1915; the first plane-to-ground radio communication, July, 1916; first loop-the-loop completed in the United States, by Lincoln Beachey; first night flight by Maj. I. C. Macauley; first massed night flight formation, November, 1918.

Lieut. "Dutch" Schildhauer, former pilot of the DO-X, is now associated with General Aviation Corporation, of Baltimore.

Harvey R. Ogden, generally recognized throughout the aviation industry as one of its finest pilots, was in town last week testing a new small bomber for the Navy. Ogden put the ship through its paces at the Naval Air Station before a large group of officers and visitors. Then he had a long wait before going to Dahlgren Proving Grounds to run off the dive tests. Harvey Ogden, although a former lieutenant in the Army, is not the Lieut. Ogden who flew around the world.

Water Color Club Holds Its Annual Exhibition at Mount Pleasant.

Danish Scientist Lectures on His Experiments With Lumia.

By ADA RAINEY.

THE Washington Water Color Club is having its annual spring exhibition at the Mount Pleasant Branch of the Public Library. The show is not so large as usual, as only the Washington members are represented but there are some very attractive water colors. Most of the paintings are small and many of them have to do with spring scenes around the city.

Tom Brown in his "Back Yards of Washington" has struck a responsive note for he has seen them as something attractive and when flooded with light and atmosphere. Eleanor Parke Custis in her two brightly colored paintings, "A Swiss Village" and "In Holland" shows the result of a summer's sojourn abroad. There is excellent construction and the human interest which always appeals when used with discrimination. A sort of tying up of the place and the people and presenting them as a unit. This is especially noted in the "Swiss Village."

Miss Custis has been doing some interesting things recently. She has just returned from the New York Water Color Club exhibition where she had two paintings hung. The New Haven Paint and Clay Club has purchased her painting, "A Breton Pardon," which was exhibited at the Corcoran Gallery last spring. She has been illustrating stories in John Martin's magazine for children.

"ON the Massachusetts Coast," by A. H. O Rolle, shows a distinct pattern which is most interesting. The artist is reaching out toward real creativeness, which is a further tep than mere reproduction of a lanscape.

"Market Place," by Nelle Patterson, is a flame of rich color. "Lake Maligne, Jasper Park," by Edith Hoyt, is a well-organized composition. "Twenty-eighty Street, Georgetown," by Susan Chase, is painted delightfully with a charm of vision.

There are two delightful portraits, one by Mathilde Leisenring, of a girl, which is as delicately drawn as one could wish for, and another water color head of an old woman, "Mother Giron," by Clara Saunders, is a little gem.

There are some good black and white prints, etchings and wood blocks or linoleum prints by Benson B. Moore, who shows his familiar animal etchings. Emily Burling Waite has two charming views of the White House and Capitol, and Ruth Osgood a very strong print called "Afternoon on the Rocks."

"Narcissus," by Elizabeth Muhlhofer, is carefully painted and the still life composition is most effective. There are two still life water colors by Hattie Burdette, "Old Pewter Tankard" and "The Yellow Fan," who does excellent work in this medium.

The exhibition will be on view through the month.

NEXT Sunday afternoon at the Arts Club there will be a tea in connection with the Bicentennial celebration by the artists under auspices of the arts and hospitality committee when the hostesses will be dressed in colonial costume.

TWO bronze busts of Washington and Benjamin Franklin by Hanlon have been loaned by Hamilton Fish, jr. There is a bust of Pocahontas by Clara Hill which is very good and a bas-relief portrait of Washington by Louise Kidder Sparrow which is one of the best things that Mrs. Sparrow has done. There are also four plaques by Margaret Broxton of Mary Ball when a girl, of Lafayette, Martha and George Washington.

THE American Federation of Arts has been holding its annual convention the past week. Every other year the convention is held in the city. In the odd years different cities, mostly in the West, divide the honor. This year the attendance was not as large as usual, yet the quality of the addresses has been high and a new standard has been set. This was shown Tuesday evening, when the subject, "Art and Nature," was discussed. Thomas Munro, curator of education in the Cleveland Museum, spoke on "The Aesthetic Approach to Nature." John C. Merriam, president of the Carnegie Institution, spoke on "Elements Involved in Appreciation of Nature."

"Swiss Village," by Eleanor Parke Custis, on exhibition by the Washington Water Color Club at the Mount Pleasant Library.

The relation of art to literature was freely discussed by such important men as the new president of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, William Sloane Coffin, Royal Bailey Farnum, principal of the Rhode Island School of Art, and Joseph L. Wheeler, librarian of the Enoch Pratt Library of Baltimore.

The convention ended Wednesday evening, when, after the members of the board had spoken, Thomas Wilfred, a Danish scientist, told of his invention and experimentation with lumia, or the art of light. Lumia is experimentation with light seen on a screen, when luminous forms move with rapidity and translate themselves into abstract planes, prisms and masses of color.

Washington artists have been coming to the fore recently. A number of artists have been represented in several exhibitions throughout the country. In the first annual exhibition of Virginia artists Lucia Hollerith and Catherine C. Critcher have paintings and in the Southern States Art League, the twelfth annual show, Marguerite Munn, Clara Saunders and also Miss Critcher and Miss Hollerith are represented. In the New York Water Color Club Susan B. Chase, Eleanor Parke Custis and Jawn Allen and Peter Wagner have paintings.

BOOKS AND THEIR AUTHORS

By ELISABETH E. POE.

GEN. JOHN JOSEPH PERSHING must indeed feel proud of his new honor, one to add to the glittering array fortune has already handed to him in the Pulitzer prize award for the best autobiography of the year. One thing is certain that no one was more surprised than Gen. Pershing when he learned the news.

The general, who makes no claim to any literary pretension, simply had written a soldier man's story of his experiences in the World War. He was more concerned with accuracy than he was with fine writing, one of the charms of the book, because a real story can tell itself without rhetorical flourishes or polished diction. Henry Fowles Pringle picks up another of the prizes with his "Theodore Roosevelt," an award in which his ever fascinating subject probably had much to do with its winning.

A well-known author of New York has made a semiserious suggestion of founding an antibook borrowers league. The only real argument against this would be the addition of another organization to the long list of memberships most of us are burdened with, whether we like it or not.

There is no accounting for book borrowers. Naturally, they want to read your books or they would not ask for them. But why, why is their sense of responsibility that they immediately consider the book as their own from that moment on and even go so far as to relend your property upon the slightest provocation. Perhaps, after all, as I remember all I have suffered from this insidious habit, I'll become a charter member of the new league and see if that can keep my favorite books on my own book shelves.

Prize announcements feature the week's literary news. Harper & Bros. announce their sixth Prize Novel Competition, which will end on February 1, 1933, with Sinclair Lewis, Dorothy Canfield and Harry Hansen as the judges. Any American citizen is eligible. Besides the tidy money award, much fame will follow the winning of this competition.

The new Atlantic Monthly prize is $5,000 for a book of nonfiction. In 1929 this prize was won by Harriet Connor Brown for her "Grandmother Brown's Hundred Years." Last year the prize went to Archer Butler Hulbert for "Forty Niners." The Atlantic prize entrants may submit biography or autobiorgraphy, the personal record of a life of interest and significance, the period past or present. It may be a study of modern science, discovery, or invention. It may be a history of a village or family or a chronicle of momentous import.

Literary Vespers make the pleasing announcement that the winner of the Edwin Markham International Poetry Contest is Charles A. Wagner. Manuscripts were submitted in the contest from all parts of the world. The judges were the president of the Poetry Society of America and the president of the Poetry Society of England.

Coming so soon after the publication of the letters of Ellen Terry to George Bernard Shaw, which have given rise to so much comment, the recent publishing of "John Ruskin's Letters to Francesca," by Lucia Gray Sweet (Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Co., Boston) is sure to arouse widespread interest.

The intimate personal life of such a man as Ruskin through correspondence revealed for all to gaze upon is an event of real literary moment. Miss Francesca Alexander, a young American artist, met Ruskin in Italy at a critical time in his life. The middle-aged scholar and the young artist found much in common to discuss, particularly poetry and sketching and a deep friendship ensued. His Oxford duties did not deter Ruskin from editing and publishing three of Francesca's books, selling some of her drawings and advising her generally about her work.

In his letters to Francesca, Ruskin wrote without restraint and, of course, without an eye to possible future publication. These facts give charm to the book because there is nothing studied about its material and yet it presents the thrilling story of a real friendship and any friendship worthy of the name is a high adventure. The story is of a friendship that began about 50 years ago, therefore the letters are filled with names of those no longer living, although some of them shine forth in the immortality of literature.

Among these are those of Frederick Tennyson, elder brother of the laureate; James Russell Lowell, John Greenleaf Whittier, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Richard H. Dana, Sir Frederick Leighton, Sarah Orne Jewett, Cardinal Manning and Gen. Sherman.

The friendship of Ruskin for Miss Alexander made her famous among her contemporaries. It brought a flood of curious visitors into her drawing room, hopeful of catching even a fleeting glimpse of the great man. Yet, the compensations of Ruskin's friendship were so great that Miss Alexander did not mind the white light of publicity which beat down upon them. On the whole, however, we must acknowledge with the author that John Ruskin was in spiritual debt to Francesca Alexander.

Something of the beauty of the relationship can be seen in this letter:

"March 15, 1884.

"Sweetest Sorella—I answer on the instant the part of your lovely letter about the harm of what people say. That is the only way the Evil Spirits can get at you, and you reall must not let them come in at th door opened by your Fratello.

"There is really nothing for it bu the true, rational, useful-needful, in dispensably cruel convent grate. Yo must live the Angelico and St. Franci life—in peace. You must simply le it be known that you need quiet, no praise; and close your door steadil against the Rich. As for selling eithe drawings or photographs, put wholly out of your head. Do wh you delight in doing and let me sh the people I can trust see to the sell ing.

"* * * Dearest love to Mamm Your devoted, FRATELLO."

"Send me the Suora addressed t Brantwood as soon as you can an never vex yourself about failure. Ho much more blessed to feel it than t be happy in all we do, and wrong!"

Fortunate, indeed, will be the boo lovers who come into possession o this volume.

THIRTY YEARS IN THE GOLDE NORTH, by Jan Welzl. (The Mac Millan Co., New York.)

Judging from all the fantasti twists given to this story, the Fa North seems to be a land where th incredible can happen at almost an time.

Experts on Arctic exploration ap pear to doubt some of Mr. Welzl' statements, but ne has told a might fine tale, full of hair-raising adven ture, and he has real powers of de scription. The author appears to hav been something of a polar "Robinso Crusoe," a novelty, at any rate.

THE DIARY OF AN EX-PRESIDEN by John P. Wintergreen, edited b Morris Ryskind. (Minton, Balch & Co., New York.)

It is rather easy to guess that th author of this book has never bee closer to a President than to watc his pictured likeness in a cinema. An Washingtonian can detect this fact i an instant. After all, the best plac in which to write of Presidents befor or after is in Washington. It ca not be done in Gotham nor yet i the streets of Cathay.

Some of the jokes and gags in th book date back to the Cleveland ad ministration and they were not eve true then.

There will be found a lot of amuse ment in this book for people who d not know their Washington. Thos who do will smile indulgently an reserve their time for that type o reading for such erudite volumes a "The Merry Go Round" and kindre effusions of those who, while know ing their Washington, refuse to dis play that knowledge even for th sake of larger royalties.

In writing her latest book, Mis Hall has again used terse, meticu lous diction and she writes with vividness, especially in the war scene where her peasant Christ is sorely a a loss how to reconcile His man made oath to His inner conviction o "Thou shalt not kill" as an injunc tion which even national necessit can not set aside.

Meantime, Miss Hall gives u graphic pen sketches of the Provenca life and the dignity of unspoile peasant life there. It may not b a best seller, but it is a good book.

Our Writings Bad Enough

Ludwig Lewisohn's Book a Review of Values of American Literature

By JOHN ERSKINE

EXPRESSION IN AMERICA, by Dudwig Lewisohn (Harper & Brothers).

THIS book revives pleasant memories. Thirty years ago, in the graduate school at Columbia, I sat in classes with two brilliant men who were close friends, and who had the admiration of the rest of us for their acquaintance with European literature and for their ability to write.

Both had the temperament for scholarship, but we believed they would some day be known for creative contributions to American letters.

They have justified the hope. One of them was William Ellery Leonard, the poet. The other was Ludwig Lewisohn. I fancy that the other members of our seminar will share the pleasure I feel, reading in these new pages Lewisohn's just and illuminating tribute to Leonard's genius, and his affectionate allusions to Prof. W. P. Trent, who presided over our studies in American literature, and set us an example too good for youth to match in intellectual hospitality and tolerance.

Most of us agreed then with Prof. Trent that American literature had not yet achieved an expression worthy of the century, and we each in our own way were resolved to change it for the better. Here we are in middle age, or somewhat more, having done what we could, and one of us has now made this arresting survey to show what remains to be done.

Even in those student days there was one difference between Leonard's outlook and Lewisohn's. The tragedy of life tortured Leonard—man's stupidity and cruelty and willful injustice; but the finer possibilities of life also haunted him and he was more full of dreams than of resentments.

Lewisohn was obsessed by those elements of the past which he did not like; they held his attention, they kept him in a static condition of grief, they controlled him more absolutely than if he had been conventional minded, for he could be counted on to take the other side, no matter in what dilemma of taste and judgment such consistent centrifugalism landed him.

He disliked the Puritan tradition. He disliked the Anglo-Saxon tradition. He disliked the Protestant tradition. He also disliked the Catholic.

Under these prejudices he was a lyrical poet. He is essentially a poet today. If ever he finds a subject through which to convey a positive picture of life as he thinks it should be, he may prove himself a very great poet indeed. Meanwhile, in everything he writes there is an emotional edge, a poignant grip, which gives elevation and impact even to those opinions of his which we can not accept.

* * * *

THIS present book is not a history of American literature, of the chronological or bibliographical kind. It is a review of values. It seeks to distinguish in our past and present output those authors who are truly creative from those who were merely accomplished or entertaining.

We need such a book, and we need this point of view. All literatures, all the arts, are cluttered with reputations temporary and undeserved, based on cultural echoes and imitations.

Lewisohn thinks American literature is in this respect worse than others, but in any case it is bad enough.

In order to sift the creative from the imitative, Lewisohn divides writers into three kinds.

First, there are the bards, spokesmen for the tribe, who, in primitive times or in our own day articulate the communal urges and emotions. Then there are the artificers, who write for writing's sake, who "choose their subject from without," and who strive to "please or to edify, never to disturb or to arouse." Last, there is the creative spirit, the eternal poet, who explores life in himself and projects it, in order to rebuild the world out of his sufferings and his vision.

* * * *

True literature, if I understand Lewisohn, should be autobiographical in manner, and it should be a compensation, in the Freudian sense, for sorrow. Of course, all men must find experience first in themselves before they can imagine it in others, and all strong natures sublimate their share of tragedy into something positive and permanent.

But Lewisohn seems to be saying that literature should keep the autobiographical manner, as though it were all lyrical poetry and there were no room for the dramatist, and he seems to provide nowhere for serene beauty or cheerful truth. If you don't blab your private troubles, you're no poet.

The application of this yardstick produces surprising results. Fenimore Cooper is just an artificer. So is Irving.

A great many writers have felt, in Europe as well as America, that Cooper's Indians and his Leatherstocking were contributions of the creative kind, and so were Irving's Knickerbocker and Rip van Winkle and Ichabod Crane, but since these figures are not autobiographical and do not record the personal sufferings of the writers, Lewisohn thinks they belong merely to entertainment and may be neglected.

This critical method, resolutely applied, might dispose of Homer. It does dispose of "Moby Dick," and of the works of Edgar Allan Poe.

Oddly enough, Lewishon uses it to dispose of Dante, who had the autobiographical manner, and who certainly shared his sorrows with the world. But Dante, being a Catholic, was committed to a philosophy of life, which the modern poet should not be, unless it is to the philosophy of Freud, and Lewishon therefore tells us that many a modern novelist can teach us more of life and man and nature than Dante.

* * * *

LEWISHON is at his best when he talks about some of our important contemporaries, especially Sinclair Lewis and Theodore Dreiser. I am surprised that he omits all reference to Edna Ferber and Fannie Hurst. Is it because they accept America, with its good and its bad, and on the whole like it?

On page 422 Lewishon makes a startling comment on American literary criticism, a comment which by implication includes his own book.

"The whole critical debate in modern America," he says, "has been rooted too profoundly in ultimate antagonisms to permit of direct debate or frank polemic."

This antagonism, he explains, is between the New Englander and the Jew. One seeks to preserve the America of his fathers; the other seeks to conquer America for his children.

He says this specifically of two well-known scholars, to whom I do not think the comment applies. But the idea falls in with the impression that in this book some ulterior purpose, conscious or unconscious, warps the appreciation of standards which in themselves are fine and much needed.

INFRA-RED The Sky Detective

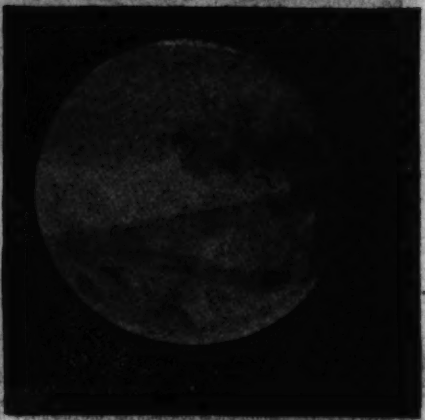
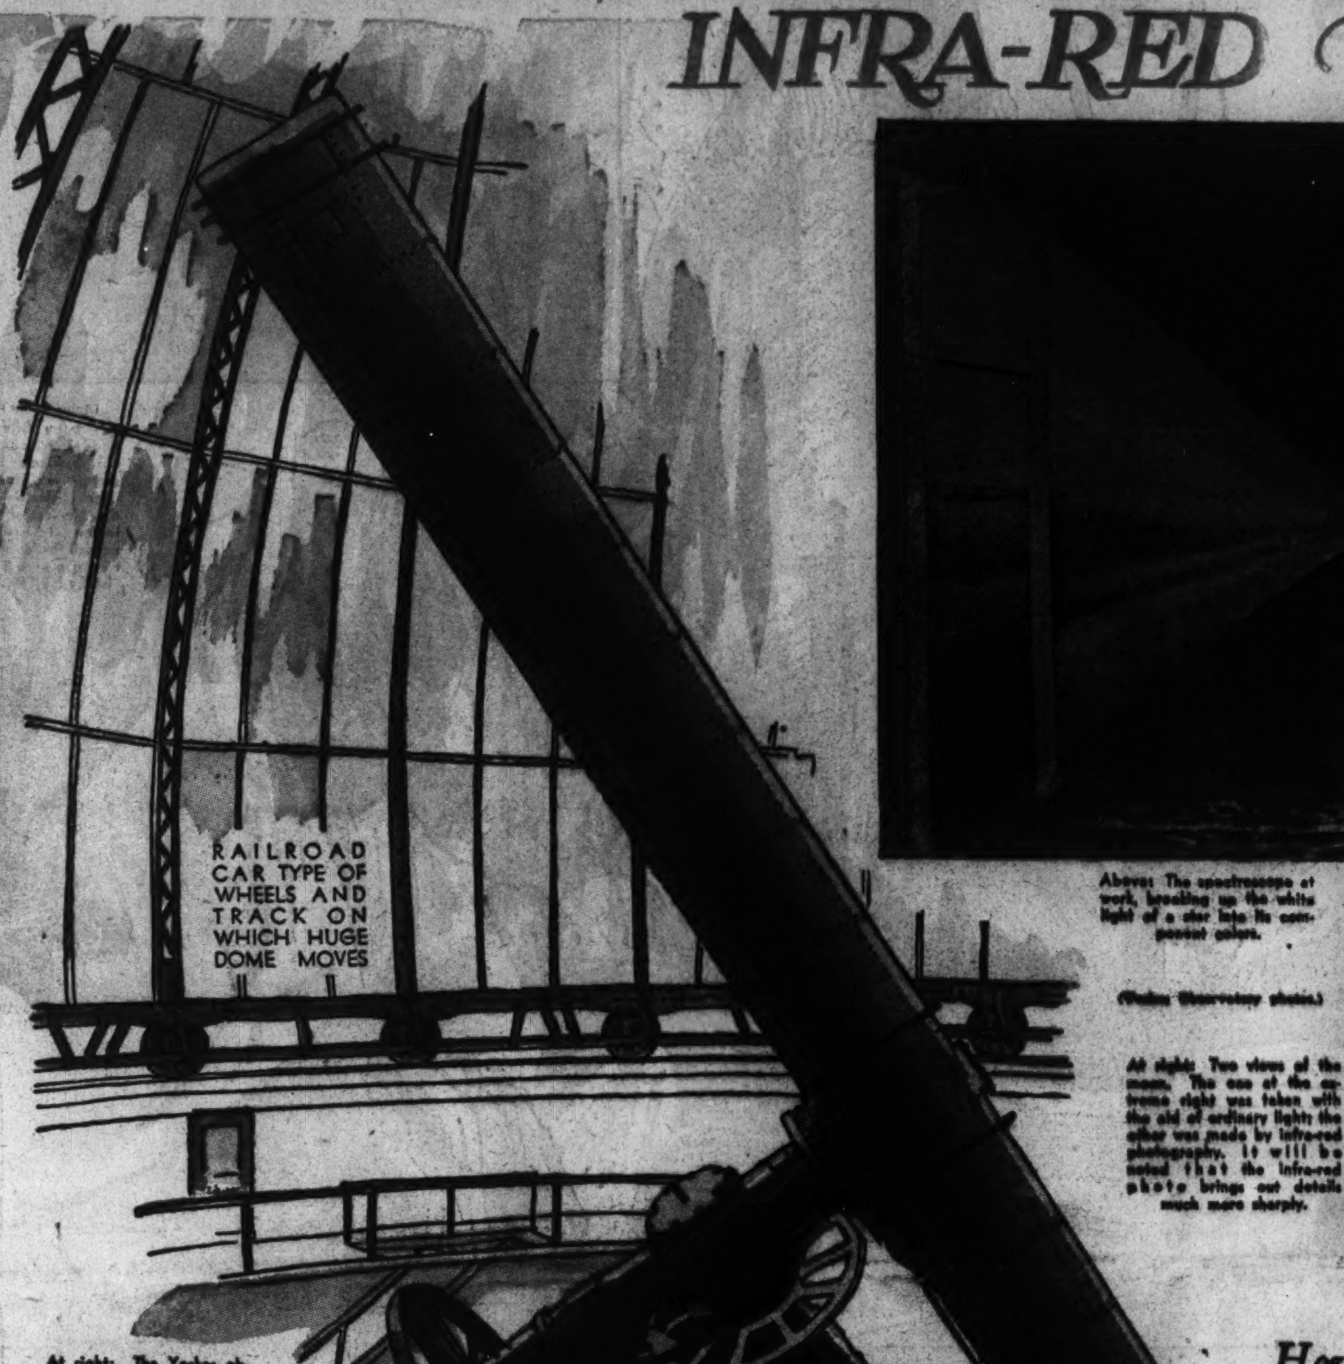
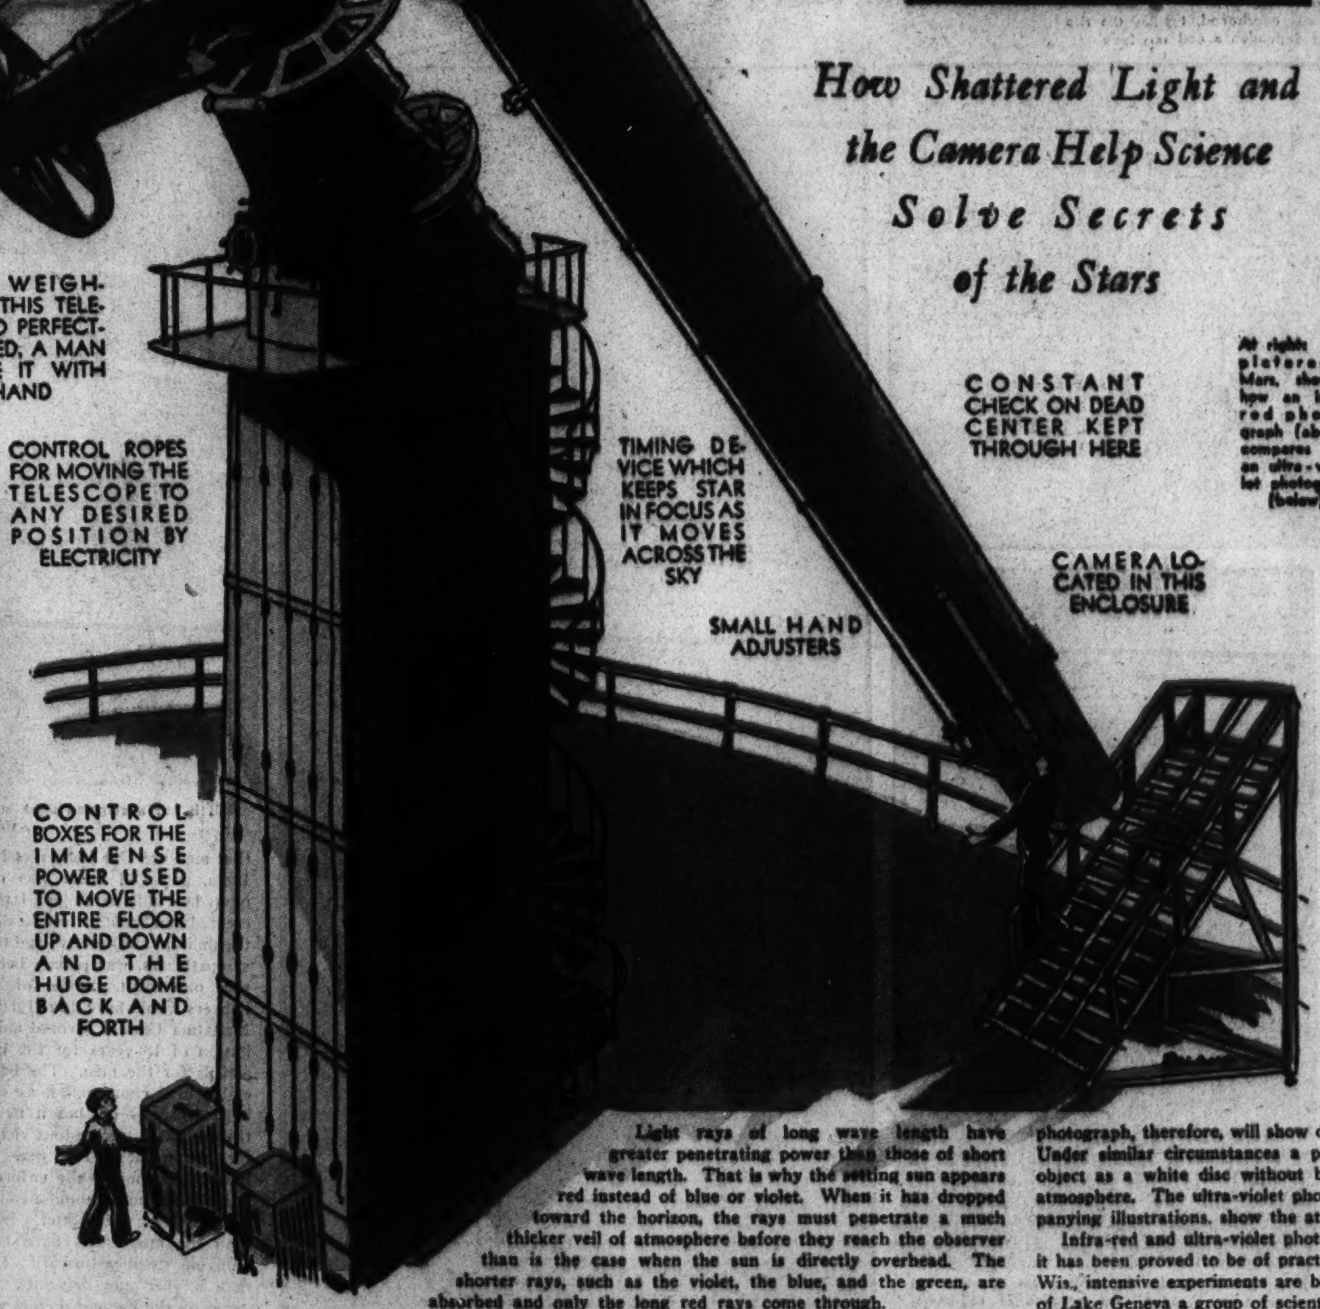
At right: Two views of the moon. The one at the extreme right was taken with the aid of ordinary light; the other was made by infra-red photography. It will be noted that the infra-red photo brings out details much more sharply.



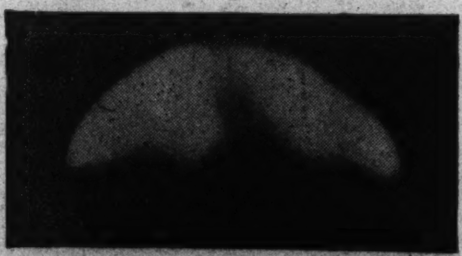
How Shattered Light and the Camera Help Science Solve Secrets of the Stars

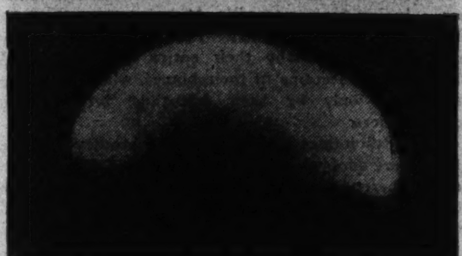




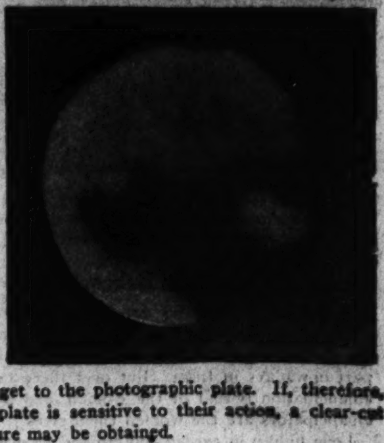
At right: The Yerkes observatory telescope, largest refracting instrument in the world, diagramed to show its operation. It is well adapted for spectroscopic work and observation of binary stars as well as for infra-red photography.

Below: Three views of Venus made by means of ultra-violet photography. By this method it is possible to photograph the cloud forms in the atmosphere surrounding the planet. They would not register on an ordinary photographic plate.





At right: Two pictures of Mars, showing how an infra-red photograph (above) compares with an ultra-violet photograph (below).



By Howard Barry

RECENT experiments in infra-red photography have led astronomers to believe that this new art will aid them considerably in their quest for new knowledge of the skies. One of their most serious problems has been to penetrate the dense clouds which cloak many of the celestial bodies so completely that an observer sees not the true surface of the objects, but only the vapors which surround it.

With the development of infra-red photography, however, it is becoming possible to get behind the clouds and discern what really is there.

Light rays of long wave length have greater penetrating power than those of short wave length. That is why the setting sun appears red instead of blue or violet. When it has dropped toward the horizon, the rays must penetrate a much thicker veil of atmosphere before they reach the observer than is the case when the sun is directly overhead. The shorter rays, such as the violet, the blue, and the green, are absorbed and only the long red rays come through.

Now, infra-red rays are even longer than red rays, and consequently have greater penetrating power. Although they are invisible to the eye, it is possible to manufacture a photographic plate which is sensitive to their action just as an ordinary plate is sensitive to visible rays of light.

When an attempt is made to take a picture of a planet by the usual methods, many of the visible rays coming from the celestial body never get past its shroud of atmosphere. Consequently an indistinct photograph results. On the other hand, the infra-red radiations which come from the planet cut right through the clouds and get to the photographic plate. If, therefore, the plate is sensitive to their action, a clear-cut picture may be obtained.

Two pictures of the moon, one made by infra-red photography and the other with ordinary light, are reproduced among the accompanying illustrations. It will be seen that the infra-red photograph brings out the details of the moon's surface much more clearly than does the other.

Similarly, a picture of the cloud-forms which surround a planet may be made by ultra-violet photography. Ultra-violet rays, being short, have less penetrating power than ordinary light rays and much less than infra-red rays. The ultra-violet rays emanating from a celestial body are stopped by dense clouds, but come through where the atmosphere is not so thick. An ultra-violet photograph, therefore, will show dark spots where the object is shrouded by clouds. Under similar circumstances a picture made with ordinary light might show the object as a white disc without bringing out any details of the formation of the atmosphere. The ultra-violet photographs of Venus, reproduced among the accompanying illustrations, show the atmosphere which surrounds the planet.

Infra-red and ultra-violet photography is still in the process of development, but it has been proved to be of practical value. At Yerkes observatory, Williams Bay, Wis., intensive experiments are being conducted in this field. There on the shores of Lake Geneva a group of scientists headed by Edwin B. Frost delves into almost every phase of astronomy.

The Yerkes telescope, which is the largest refracting instrument in the world, is pictured in one of the accompanying illustrations. The camera which is used in photographing the skies is clamped into the position ordinarily occupied by the eyepiece of the telescope. The instrument is then focused upon some star or planet, and a photographic exposure is made.

As the rotation of the earth would carry the telescope quickly out of focus,

INDIA'S Dusky Suffragettes

They Are Freeing Themselves and Their Sisters from the Ancient Institutions of Child Marriage, Imprisonment in "Purdah," Dependence, and Servitude

Mrs. Hansa Mehta addressing 14,-000 fellow Hindus on the Esplanade Maiden in Bombay. This feminine orator, who became president of the war council of the Bombay provincial congress committee when the male president was imprisoned, typifies the rise of the women of her country from age-old dependence and servitude.

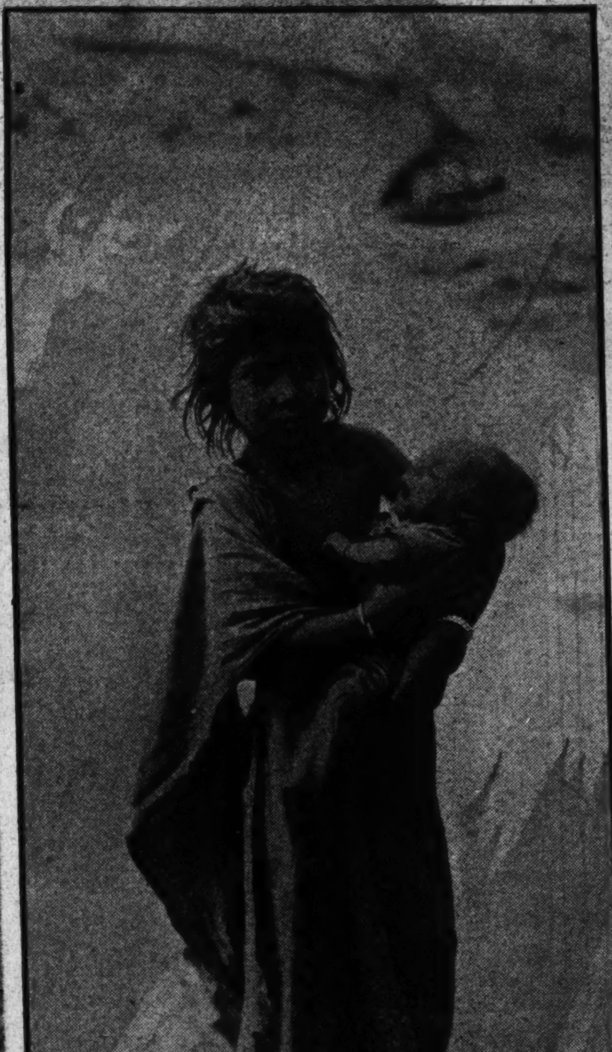
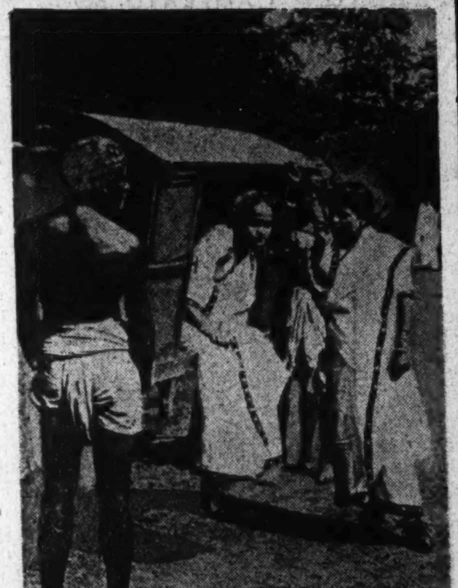
A "baby bride," aged 7, robed for her marriage. The picture was taken near Lucknow, India. By act of the Indian legislative council child marriages were banned in 1929.

Going in for culture. A group of high caste women playing on native instruments the classic music of Indian composers.



The tragedy of childhood. The little Hindu mother doesn't seem especially happy over the situation—and the baby seems even less so.

This is not a common sight in India; but, rare as it is, the feminine boxing match is a striking symbol of emancipation. (Acme photo.)



The type of woman the government in India has saved from "suttee," the practice of self-immolation on the dead husband's funeral pyre.

By Frederic Babcock

AMERICA'S battles for, first, freedom from England and, later, for freeing the slaves are having their counterpart nowadays in India. But over there the emancipation is that of the women, and the emancipators are the women themselves.

Long hidden in purdah and crushed by marriage while still a child, the woman of Hindustan is coming into her own. She has caught on to the western world's idea of liberty, and she is taking momentous steps in that direction. She is even going so far as to demand the right to divorce and remarry.

It was two and a half years ago that the Indian legislative council, responding to the wave of progressive sentiment, decided to outlaw the child marriage system which for centuries had shocked the world. In a scene of riotous emotions, with religious hysteria vying with modern social thought, the council adopted the Sarda bill, raising the age limit for brides to 15 years and for bridegrooms to 16. Until that time, the girls were commonly married around the age of 12, with the result that they found themselves mothers about the time American girls were finishing grammar school. Often they were married at the age of 6.

Persons who ought to know say the Hindu woman's lot never was as bad as it has been painted. They say Katherine Mayo took only extreme cases on which to base her "Mother India" indictment of the status of Indian womanhood. Yet the fact remains that until recently child marriage was one of the distinct curses of the country. One county alone had 100,000 widows, married when about 10 years old and deserted when their consorts grew to the age of reason and discrimination.

These unions of immature children had bred sickness and disease and an appalling death rate. Tuberculosis was rampant. Poverty stalked the weddings. Revolting crimes were the harvest. That was the situation when the Sarda bill came up for passage. In the struggle over that measure Old India met New India, and Old India was conquered. Public sentiment, largely created and brought to a head by the militant suffragettes and their sympathizers, was plainly behind the movement. Some of the backers would have gone further. Mahatma Gandhi favored a limitation of 18 years for the girls and 25 for the men. The battle ended in a compromise, as such battles usually do, but it nevertheless was a tremendous victory for the women. The new law hasn't been universally enforced, but it has brought about a radical change for the better. Since then the modernists have been plunging steadily forward. Less than a year ago delegates, angered by the age-old dictum that a woman's place was in the home, stood up at the All Bengal Women's congress in Calcutta and called for six distinct reforms. They demanded:

1—Immediate abolition of polygamy throughout India.

2—Strict enforcement of the Sarda act.

3—The right of Hindu women to divorce.

4—The right of Hindu widows to remarry.

5—Equal facilities with men in the spheres of trade, commerce, and the professions.

6—Abolition of the system of purdah.

It was related at the time that about ten million Indian women, mostly Mohammedan, still were imprisoned in purdah. That is, they were forced to pass virtually their entire lives shut off in certain sections of their homes, where they were seen only by their husbands, brothers, and fathers.

Resolutions embodying these proposed reforms were adopted unanimously—all except No. 3. The inherent conservatism of Indian womanhood rebelled against divorce. There was a warm debate. "What will happen to the chastity of our women if we permit divorce?" one delegate wanted to know. She was quickly answered. American and European women leave their husbands when necessary, another delegate pointed out, and it would not be fair to say the standard of chastity and morality among these occidentals had been lowered. "The right to divorce is the right to be free," it was declared. That was the general thought, and that was the decision. The resolution carried by a large majority—but not unanimously.

Young Adam Yestreen, Scots Minister, Tells of the Remote Village in Which He Has Come to Live, and of the Strange Spirits That Haunt It in Winter . . . A Delightful Two-Part Story by a Modern Master

I. The English

THIS is Dec. 1, 186—; I think it prudent to go no nearer to the date, in case what I am writing should take an ill turn or fall into curious hands. I need not be so guarded about the weather. It is a night of sudden blasts that half an hour ago threw my window at me. They went skirling from room to room like officers of the law seeking to seize and deliver to justice the venturesome Scots minister who is sitting here ready to impeach all wraiths and warlocks. There was another blast the now. I believe I could rope the winds of the manse to do my bidding tonight and, by running from door to door, opening and shutting, become the conductor of a gey sinister orchestra.

I am trying to make a start at the diary the English have challenged me to write. There is no call to begin tonight, for as yet not a flake has fallen in this my first winter in the glen, and the diary is to be a record of my life here during the weeks ('tis said it may be months) in which the glen is "locked," meaning it may be so happit in snow that no one who is in can get out of it, and no one who is out can get in. Then, according to the stories that crawl like mist among our hills, where the English must have picked them up, come forms called the "Strangers." You "go queer" yourself without knowing it, and walk and talk with them, thinking they are of your world till maybe they have mischieved you. It is all, of course, superstitious havers, bred of folk who are used to the travail of out of doors and take ill with having to squat by the saut-bucket, but I have promised with a smile to keep my eyes and ears intent for tergiversations among my flock, and to record them for the benefit of the English when they come back here next August. Possibly there will be very little snow, for 'tis said the white winters sometimes jump a year or two, which must be vexatious to the Strangers.

My name is the Rev. Adam Yestreen; and, to be candid, I care not for the Adam with its unfortunate associations. I am 26 years of age, and, though long in the legs, look maybe younger than is seemly in my sacred calling, being clean shaven without any need to use an implement; indeed, I may say I have desisted for two years back. My congregation would naturally have liked me to have a beard.

My manse and kirk are isolated on one side of the burn, but on the other side, so close that I can keep a vigilant eye on them, are the Five Houses in a Row, which, the English say, incorrectly but with no evil design, contain all the congregation I can depend upon for a wet day. On the contrary, there is a hantle of small farms in the glen, forbye shepherds' sheilings and bothies, and an occasional roadside bigging of clay and divot in which may be both man and beast; truly, when I chap I seldom know which will come to the door.

The English, who make use of many old words that even our Highlandmen have forgotten, call the Five Houses the "clachan." They are one-story houses, whitewashed and thacked, and they all open on to the glen road, as if not to miss any diversion that may be passing by. A coarse grass grows on the road in lines as straight as potato drills, and carriage folk who do not keep the ruts are shaken most terrible. One of the English told me that his machine sometimes threw him so high in the air that when he was up there he saw small lochs hitherto unknown to man, and stopped his horse and fished them. The English, however, who have many virtues, though not of a very solid kind, are great exaggerators.

The carriage folk, except when she lets what is familiarly called the Grand House to the English, consist of Mistress Lindinnock alone, who is called (but never to her face) the Old Lady. She has two spirited ponies, but not so spirited as herself. She goes to Edinburgh while the Grand House is let, and, excepting myself (on account of my office), is the chief person in the glen. She has been a fine friend to me, but I have sometimes to admonish her for a little coarseness in her language. I grieve to say that this lady of many commendable parts plays cards, and I once saw her at it. Her adversary was a traveling watchmaker, one of those who traverse the whole land carrying a wooden box of watches on his back, with a dozen more ticking in his many waistcoat pockets. They were playing for high sums, too, the Old Lady sitting inside one of her windows and the man body outside it on a stool. I think this is done to preserve the difference in rank, but when I denounced her for it she said the object was to make all right for her future, as the players being on different sides of the window took away the curse.

II. Some One Who Was with Him

DEC. 3.—I have read the above over more than once and then hid it away from Christilly, because it is written on sermon paper. Christilly is a most faithful young woman with a face as red and lush as a rasp, who knows her carritches both ways and has such a reverence for ministers that she looks upon me more as an edifice than a mortal. She has an almost equal pride in herself for being a minister's servant, and walks into the kirk with an official genteelity that some consider offensive. She has also a provoking way of discussing me in my presence as if I was not there, telling visitors the most intimate things about me, such as the food I like but it does not like me, the while she stands in what is meant to be a respectful attitude, neither inside nor outside the door.

My visitors are likely to be few for some time to come, neighbors from the Five Houses whiles, and I hope Mistress Lindinnock and Dr. John from Branders. The smith at the Five Houses is my chief elder, and, as his bairns are innumerable, the family in their two pews are a heartsome sight. A more cautious man in argument I have never known. About as far as he will go is, "I agree with you to a certain extent," or "My answer to that is yes and no." Posty has a story that he made the second of these answers at his marriage when asked if he took this woman.

Posty is also at the Five Houses. His most valued possession is a velocipede, which has so often come to bits when he was on it that near every man in the glen has been at the repairing of it, including myself, or at least has contributed chains or iron girds. He brings the letters from Branders on this machine, and, as it often runs away with him, we all—dogs, hens, and humans—loup the dyke when we see him bearing down on us. He carries telegrams, too, but there are so few of these, now the English have gone, that when we see him waving one we ask, "Who is dead?"

My great friend is Dr. John, who is sometimes in the glen to succor us, though he lives at Branders, where he sits under Mr. Watery. Branders is an important place of five hundred inhabitants and stands near a loch, out of which two streams run in opposite directions, like parties to a family feud that can no longer be settled with the claymore. Branders is not in the glen, but just at the head of it, and, according to Dr. John, it stopped there because it said to itself, "Those who go farther will fare worse." It is jimply six miles from my manse in summer weather, but seventeen from the nearest railway station and electric telegraph. Dr. John says that whether Branders is the beginning or end of desolation depends on your looking up or down the road.

A gnarled little figure of about fifty is Dr. John, grandly bearded, but for a man of larger size. He wears a plaid in all weathers and sometimes even in the house, for, as he says, before he has time to wap it off and find it again somebody on a cart horse will be clattering to his door to hurry him to my glen. I have seen him, too, sitting behind on that clattering horse. Repute says that for humane ends he will get through when the glen is locked to all others, though his sole recompense will be a ham at the killing or a kebbock or a keg of that drink I have spelt ——. Though I touch it not, I cannot deny that he partakes as if it were water, and is celebrated (and even condoled with) for never being the worse of it.

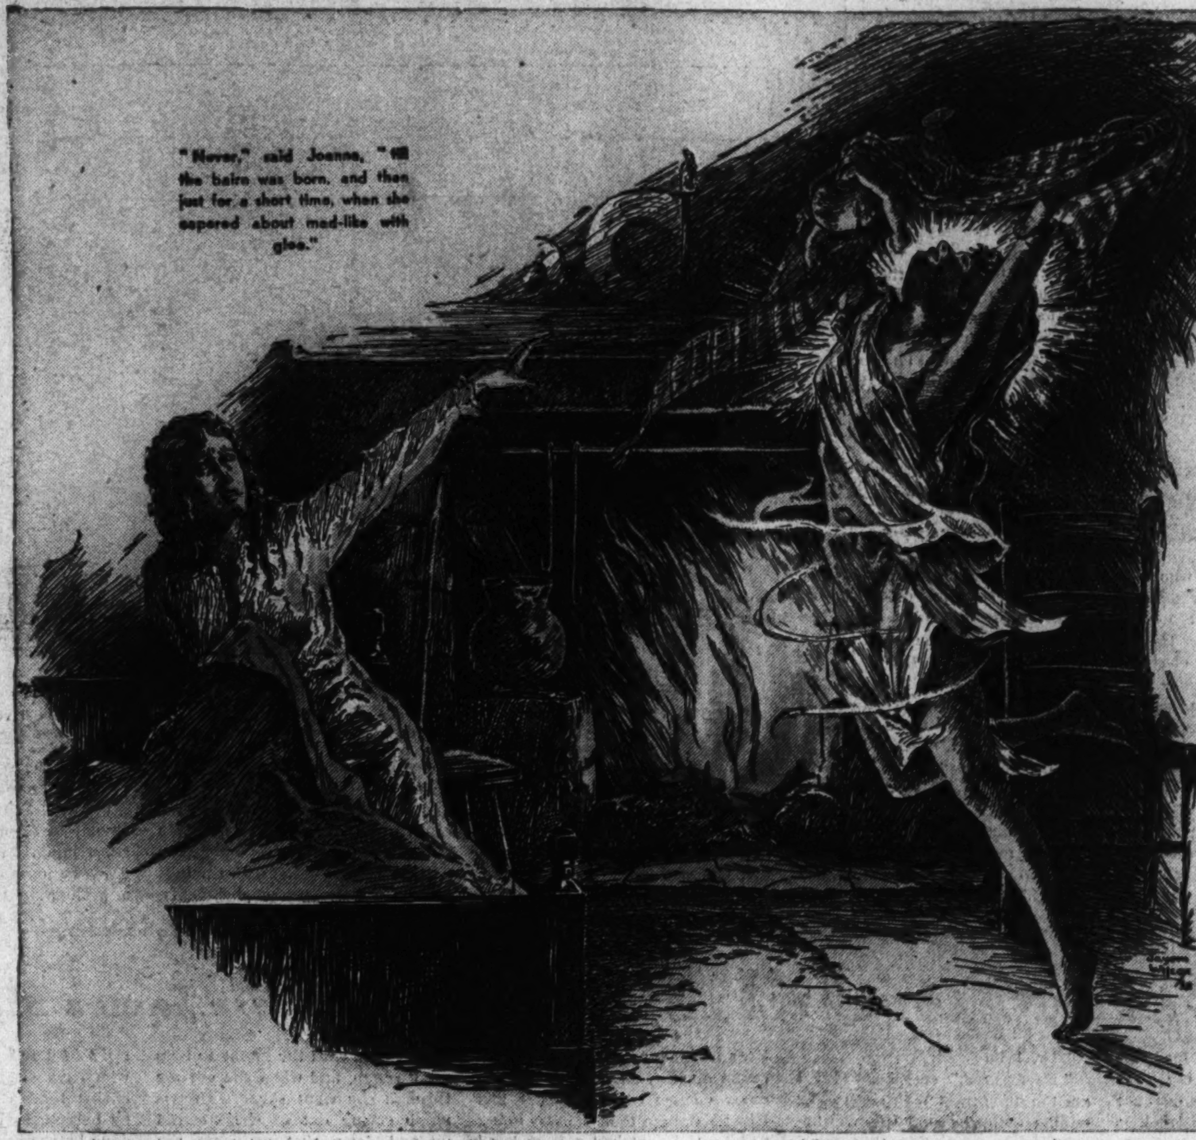
If he is in the glen he sometimes puts up his shalt at the Five Houses and stays the night with me, when we have long cracks, the while he smokes his pipe, grunting, which is the Scotch way of bringing out the flavor. Last night was such an occasion, and we got on to the stories about "Strangers," of which he says humorously he has heard many clutters, though he has never had the luck to encounter the carls themselves. He maintains that the origin of all the clutters of nowadays was that cankering affair of the '45, which, among its misdeeds, for long gave an ill name to the pipes.

The glen had been a great hiding place of "pretty men" of the period, and among its fearsome crags and caverns, if ancient tales be true, those ill-gettit gentlemen had lurked for months and some of them for years. It is said that forbears of folk still in the glen saw them from below, searching for roots, and so distraught with hunger that they went on searching openly while they were being shot at by the redcoats, who would not face the climb. When the glen was in a blanket of snow and pursuit for a time at an end they sometimes lay at the Grand House, which was loyal to their dark cause, and held secret carouse there.

They were talked of cautiously by the glen folk of those times, who liked best to be of no party unless they were of both, would not betray them to an enemy that hunted them with bloodhounds, yet would hold no intercourse with them willingly, and looked the other way if they came upon one of the gaunt red-shanks unexpectedly, as sometimes happened, carrying braxy mutton or venison to his lurking place, or a salmon the otters had left by the burn after taking one nip from its neck.

The glen folk were too mouse to call the hunted ones Jacobites. "The Strangers," they said. In the queerest story that has come down to us they called the heroine "Some One who was with Him." The Him was a fugitive who is believed by the simple to have been the Chevalier himself. He is said to have lain in the glen in July month, fevered and so hard pressed that no friends dared go nigh him lest it led to his capture. I have not seen his hoddy place, but the doctor tells me it is still there and is no more than a lair beneath what we call a bield, a shelter for sheep. Very like it began by being a tod's hole, and was torn bigger with Ogilvy dirks. If it ever existed, the lair has been long filled up with stones, which are all that remain to mark the royal residence.

Sheep again shelter in the bield, but there were none there in the time of the prince, if it was he, nor as they say could food be passed to him. In his extremity he was saved by Some One who was with Him. Of course, the legend has it that she was young, and fair, and of high degree, and that she loved much. She fed him with the unwilling help of the eagles. The Eagles Rock, which is not far from the bield, is a mighty mass, said by the ghillies of today to be unscalable by man because of what is called the Logan Stone. No eagles build there now; they have fallen to the guns of their modern enemy, the keepers, who swear that one pair of eagles will carry a hundred grouse or more to their nests to feed their young. But at that time there was an eagle's nest on the top of the rock.



"Never," said Joanna, "till the bairn was born, and then just for a short time, when she capered about mad-like with glee."

The climb is a perilous one, but now and again hardy folk get up as far as the Logan Stone, where they turn back. There are Logan Stones, I am told, throughout the world, and they are rocking stones. It is said they may be seen rocking in the wind, and that they never lose this property, though with the centuries they wear small. Such a monster hangs out from our Eagles Rock, and you cannot reach the top save by climbing over it, nor can you get on to the stone without leaping, and it is as rounded as an egg. Twice men of the glen have leapt and it threw them off.

Nathless, the story is that this Some One who was with Him got through the searchers in the dark, reached the top of the rock by way of the Logan Stone, and after sometimes fighting the parent eagles for possession brought down young grouse for her lord. By all kind accounts she was a maiden, and in our glen she is remembered by the white heather which, never seen here till then, is called the marks of her pretty naked feet.

It brought her little luck. In a hurried and maybe bloody flitting she was left behind. Nothing more is recorded of her except that when her master embarked for France he enjoined his Highlanders "to feed her and honor her as she had fed and honored him." They were faithful though misguided, and I daresay they would have done it if they could. Some think, according to the doctor, that she is in the bield in the hole beneath the stones, still waiting. They say, maybe there was a promise. To what clan she belonged is unknown, but in the glen they think it was probably the one that is a little better than the rest.

III. The Spectrum

DEC. 3 (Cont'd)—"I am thinking," Dr. John went on, "that all the daftness about folk of nowaday meeting 'Strangers' when the glen is locked comes out of that troubled past. In a white winter, as you have jaloused yourself, folk hark back by the hearthstones to the forgotten, aye, and the forbidden. But I assure you, despite the whispers, the very name of the '45 is now grass-grown in this glen. Even Posty, though he is sib with the pipes, gets dunder-headed if you press him about what his old ballants mean. Neither good luck nor mischief, so far as I can discover, comes to the havrels who think they have talked or walked with a Stranger, unless, indeed, as some say, it was one of them who mairtered poor Mr. H., and I understand he, being a learned man, always called it a Spectrum."

This set us talking of him of whom I have already hinted that he once kept a diary in this manse. It was so long ago as to be just a legend even to Dr. John, in the days when there were no seats in my kirk, and all stood on their shanks. Though I say we talked about him we really said very little unless an occasional furtive glance be speech. All in these parts become furtive when a word, falling as meaningless you would say as a cinder on the hearth, brings the old man to mind.

Mr. H. was a distant predecessor of mine, and a scholar such as the manse is not likely to know again. It was he who collected the library of noble erudition that is in the presses of this room, many of the volumes bound or rebound by his fond hands. His diary was written on the fly leaves of a number of them. I believe he thought in Latin and Greek quicker than in his own tongue, for his hurried notes are often in those languages and the more deliberate ones in ours.

It is not known even by the credulous when, in Mr. H.'s distorted fancy, the Spectrum first came chapping softly at the manse door, and afterwards blattering on it, in a wicked desire to drive him out of the house and take his place. But it was while the glen was locked. According to the stories, sometimes one of them was inside the house and sometimes the other. Sounds were heard, they say, coming from the study, of voices in conflict and blows struck.

The dwellers of that time in the Five Houses, of whom two carlines are still alive, maintained that they had seen Mr. H. sitting on his dyke at night, because the other was in possession. They claimed that they had seen the other also, and that he did not walk. "He padded," they said. By this time no servant would bide in the manse after gloaming, and yet though Mr. H. was now the one chapping at the door they said they could see a light being carried in the house from room to room.

"When they found him, according to the stories," the doctor said, "his face was in an awful mess."

What had caused that? I asked, and he said shortly that he supposed spectrums had teeth.

It was eerie to reflect that to those two carlines, as we call ancient women, my study must still be more his than mine, and that they would not have been taken aback if they had come into it at that moment and found him in this chair instead of me. We tried to get on to more comfortable subjects, but it was as if the scholar's story would not leave the room.

"I feel as if there were three of us here tonight," I said to the doctor.

"Aye," said he, "and a fourth keeking in at the window."

As usual our sitting ended with Christilly coming in to announce that she gave us ten minutes before she carried away the lamp. She also mentioned, as a matter of smaller importance, that it was snowing.

IV. The Locking of the Glen

DEC. 19—In this white world the dreadest moment is when custom makes you wind up your watch. Were it not for the Sabbath I would get lost in my dates. Not a word has gone into my diary for a fortnight. Now would be the time if there were anything to chronicle, but nothing happens, unless one counts as events that I have brought my hens, whose toes I found frozen to the perch, and my two sheep into the manse, or that yesterday my garden slithered off to the burn with me on it like a passenger. I have sat down whiles to the diary to try to fill up with old matter, but the whiteness of the sheets gives me a scunner, and I put it away. The snow has choked my diary as well as the glen.

I am practically cut off from my kind. Even the few trees are bearing white ropes, thick as my wrist, instead of branches, and the only thing that is a bonny black is the burn, once a mere driblet but now deep and boastful, and unchancey to cross. At ordinary times they cross here to the kirk in two easy jumps on boulders placed there for the purpose, and called the brig, but the boulders are now like sunk boats and, of the sprinkling of members who reached the kirk on the 9th, one used a vaulting pole and lost it.

Two or three times Posty, without his velocipede, has penetrated to Branders, and delivered my letters and a newspaper to me by casting them over the burn tied to stones. There is no word of Dr. John. For nearly a week, except for an occasional shout, I have heard no voice but Christilly's. It is a treat to me now, though formerly when I had company an irritation, to see her friendly foot keeping the study door open. I sit up here reading and nodding, or I go out and shovel, though all I shovel away, and more, may be back by morning.

I will now go and say good-night to the Old Lady, for though it is barely 9 o'clock, we keep early hours in the snow. This is a moment I owe to her ingenuity. The Grand House, which has, of course, a statelier name of its own, is a steep climb from here, and is at present inaccessible, but it is visible, and at 9 o'clock she shoots her blind up and down twice, and I reply with mine. Hers, I am thankful to say, is red, or the lamp behind it has a red shade, and this shooting of the blinds is our way of saying good-night. There is a warmth about it when the glen is so still that I am thinking you could hear a whit-rit on the move. Sometimes I stand by my window long after hers is dark, and I have felt that night was waiting, as it must have done once, for the first day. It is the stillness that is so terrible. If only something would crack the stillness.

V. A Stranger

DEC. 21.—For the first time since the glen was locked, Dr. John "threw in," as we say, this morning. He came straight to the study, where he found us at family exercise. I did not look up from my knees, but Christilly whispered to me, "Be short," which I daresay made me in consequence a little longer. Yet I knew she would not have taken such a liberty unless there was something untoward with the man, and though I found when I rose that he was on his knees with us, I saw that he had gone to sleep on them.

His face was so peaked that I sent Christilly hurriedly for the bottle of brandy that has lain in the manse uncorked since I came here six months ago, and as soon as he had partaken she hauled off his boots and rushed him into the lobby to scrape him, for he was getting on to the carpet. I saw he wanted to be rid of her before communicating something by-ordinar to me, and he took the best way to effect this by saying in a sentence that he had got through to Joanna

Honoring a Patron Saint

TWO Protestant orders of St. John of Jerusalem, which derive their origin from the same source as the ancient order of Knights of Malta, exist in Prussia and England. It was in 1888 that Queen Victoria granted a charter formally incorporating the English order. Its headquarters were established in the ancient gateway of the priory at Clerkenwell. The prince of Wales, later King Edward VII., was the first grand prior. The cross of the order is the gold, white enameled Maltese cross, differenced by two lions and two unicorns placed between the arms. Unlike the Prussian order, the English order does not require that its members be Protestants, though it insists they must profess Christianity. In the accompanying picture knights of the English order are shown celebrating the day of their patron saint. The duke of Connaught, grand prior, second in the procession, held an investiture in the chapel hall at Clerkenwell.

Listening to a Bean's Song

WHO ever would believe that seeds have secrets? And who ever would believe that seeds could be made to divulge their secrets? The accompanying picture shows Fred J. Hart, manager of a radio station at San Jose, Cal., tuning in on the secrets of nature. He has perfected an electrically operated apparatus to measure the electrical energy radiated by seeds. By some mysterious process he, in some way, sends a current of electricity through a tiny seed or a bean, and by listening in on the vibrations tells how large the plant will be that will sprout from the seed or bean. Mr. Hart's device is expected to be of great help to agriculturists and plant nursery men, who ever are on the lookout for scientific means of advancing their profession. A seed or bean full of potency is said to react remarkably to Mr. Hart's electrical testing machine, while a lifeless seed shows little, if any, reaction. Obviously this new method might be a great improvement over the old way of testing seeds by watching for sprouts as they lie scattered over sheets of moistened blotting paper.

DIET YOUR WAY to FACIAL BEAUTY

By Antoinette Donnelly

IT IS rumored that a renewed war on feminine fat is on with a vengeance, the idea being to make the figure supply the lines that the purse cannot afford this year. It's true, as you know, that a woman reaching a certain weight has to spend more for her clothes than does her lean sisters. She must spend in order to get the good lines that conceal fat and effect the streamline silhouette.

So women, bowing to the depression felt by the pocketbook, are proving that it will take more than a little thing like financial depression to keep them from hewing to the slim line of fashion.

It is told by some of our investigating scouts that women are passing up facial care (involving money expenditure) for the better figure lines (involving massage and circulatory treatment expense), on the dress theory just cited. Which brings us around to a point about skin and complexion beauty and the benefits accruing to each simultaneously through reformed diets.

We women have the habit of thinking of the complexion as a thing of local interest purely. We are intrigued by the ads promising youthful loveliness of skin with a lotion or a cream.

And we are right in giving eye and ear to these local reminders, for local attention must be given the skin. But what we women need to be reminded of just as frequently is that diseases of the skin, blemishes of the skin, color, and, in some cases, texture of the skin are matters of internal origin generally. And the tie-up with the reduction of excess weight and skin condition, as we are tying it up today, is something I want women to think about.

Every medical authority tells us that two of the commonest factors in the development of skin troubles are over-eating and constipation. The two commonest factors in weight accumulation are the identical pair of trouble makers, too much food consumption and irregular elimination.

In the years I have been overseeing reducing experiments (and these experiments have covered thousands of cases), time and again it has been reported to me how the complexion has undergone a magic change along with the better silhouette accomplishments. The complexion takes on a clearer and cleaner tone.

I have had women report a change of complexion tone after a short liquid diet period, the three day one usually recommended as a prelude to the actual reducing campaign. The reason for this improved state of skin is due to the fact that the liquids have acted as eliminative factors. The system has been washed out, so to speak. Skin and eyes immediately take on a markedly clearer tone.

So you can mark it down in your book that no other group of causes more frequently produce diseases of the skin than improper diet, bad habits of eating and living, and the series of digestive disturbances that go with these. Substances are introduced into the blood stream which cause skin irritation of one kind or another.

The proper diet for the hygiene of the skin calls for the substitution of the type of foodstuffs that are recommended in a sane and healthy reducing program. Diet for the skin has no secrets of its own. The same mixed and properly balanced maintenance diet serves beauty to both face and form. The same heavy, starchy things must be avoided for the improvement of both face and form. And the same type of exercise that serves to give tone to muscles of the body and prevent early return of flesh gives the needed impetus to blood circulation that rules the state of the skin.

A good reducing diet, as you are fully aware, does not eliminate all starches, all sweets, all fats. It minimizes their intake. It's the too liberal consumption of hot, fresh breads, pastries and cakes, sugars and sweets that make for both bad figures and bad skins. Carbohydrates, starches, and sweets may be taken in moderation and should be. The value of fresh vegetables and fruits in the diet is that they consist, in addition to water, of fibrous material and are laxative.

A point of beauty conquest we women are terribly remiss on is that of water consumption. In reducing programs water drinking is strongly advocated. And where it is indulged it is immediately beneficial to the complexion.

"Back to the old oaken bucket" is the slogan of lovely Joan Blondell. Drink more water if you want to be more beautiful . . . and do your water drinking particularly between meals.

Farewell Miss Julie Logan by Sir James M. Barrie

Minch and it was a girl and both were doing well; whereupon Christilly was off to cry the tidings across the burn.

He was nodding in his chair with fatigue, so that it looked as if only by sudden jerks could he keep his head on, but he brought out the words, "There is more in it than I told Christilly. I have been to the shieling, but I did not get through in time. There were two lives saved in that bit house in the small hours; but don't be congratulating me, for I had naught to do with it." Having said this he fell into a torpor, and I had ill rousing him, which I was sweer to do, but he made it plain that he wanted to say more.

"It's such a camsterie tale," he said, "as might banish sleep in any man; but I am dog tired, and unless you keep pulling my beard with all the strength that is in you we'll never come to the end of it." I may say here that I had to do as he instructed me several times. We must have looked a strange pair, the doctor yawning and going off as if for the winter months, while I tugged fiercely at the beard.

I will put his bewildering tale together as best I can. He had forced his way last evening to an outlying farm where a herd was lying with two broken legs. While he was there Fargie Routh, the husband of Joanna, had tracked him down to say that she was terrible near her reckoning. The doctor started off with him rather anxious, for Fargie was "through ither," and it was Joanna's first.

Dr. John had floundered into worse drifts, but the wind was lashing his face and the visibility was so bad that they soon lost each other. He tumbled and rumbled down in a way at which he is a master hand, and reached the shieling hours before the husband, who is a decent stock but very unusual in the legs. The distance is a short mile when the track is above ground. Dr. John was relieved to smell smoke, for he dreaded that Fargie might not have had the sense to heap on the peat and that the woman might be found frozen.

I told him I knew the house, which is a lonesome one roomed cot of double stone and divot. I asked if he had found Joanna alone, but he had taken the opportunity of my making a remark to fall asleep again. I got his eyes open in the manner recommended by him, and he said with even a little leer at me, "She was not quite alone; but may be you are one of those who do not count an infant till it be christened."

"If there is any haste for that——" I cried, looking for my boots.

"There is none," he said.

"But who had been with her? Was she in such a bad condition that she could give you no information about that?"

"She was in fine condition and she could and she did," he said. "I was with her till Fargie, who had gone back to the farm, brought down the wife, and I have no doubt Joanna is now giving the particulars to them. They are such uncommon particulars," he went on, "that I can fancy even the proud infant sitting up to listen to them."

Then who was it that had acted in his place, I asked, not daring to be more prolix lest he should again be overtaken.

That, he said, was what he was asking me.

"Dr. John——"

"Be assured," said he, "that I am too dung ower with sleep to be trifling with you; but this will become more your affair than mine. It is not to me they will look to be told who she was but to their minister."

"I hope I shall not fail them," I said loftily. Nevertheless I dreed what was coming, and I insisted on his keeping awake, "or I would lay a hot iron on the beard." He said he had found a kettle on a bright fire and Joanna in her bed with the child, who was fittingly swaddled in a shawl. He would not let her talk until he had satisfied himself that everything necessary had been done, and then (for the curiosity was mounting to his brain) he said with pretended casualness, "I see you and your friend have been having a nice cup of tea."

"And merry she was at the making of it," replied Joanna, turning merry herself.

"I forget," said he, "if you mentioned who she was?"

"Of course it was one of the Strangers," she said.

"Of course it would be one of those curiosities," said he, "but I never chanced to fall in with ane; what was she like?"

"O," said Joanna, "she was like the little gentleman that sits under his tail"—meaning a squirrel.

"I thought she would be something like that," he said, "but had you no fear of her?"

"Never," said Joanna, "till the bairn was born, and then for just a short time, when she capered about mad-like with glee, holding it high in the air and dressing and undressing it in the shawl, so as to have another peep at it, and very proud of what she had done till a queer change came over her and I had a sinking that she was going to bite it. I snatched it from her."

"To bite them is not my usual procedure at a birth," the doctor had said, "but we all have our different ways."

Joanna gave him a fuller story of the night than, as he said, would be of any profit to a sumph of a bachelor like Adam Yestreen, but he told me some of its events. The door had blown open soon after Fargie's departure, leaving naught but reek to heat her, and when the fire went down she would have been glad to cry back the reek. She thought the cold candle of her life was at the flicker.

The Stranger re-lit the fire, but there was no way she could conceive of heating that body on the box-bed. Then the grand thought came to her. "She strippit herself naked," Joanna said, "and lay at my feet and made me keep them on her, as if she were one of them pig bottles for toasting the feet of the gentry, and when my feet were warm, she lay close to me, first on one side and then on the other. She was as warm as a browning bannock when she began, but by the time the heat of her had passed into me I'se uphaud she was as cold as a trout."

As to the actual birth, though this was Joanna's first child, she knew more about the business than did her visitor, who seems to have been in a dither of importance over the novelty of the occasion. She was sometimes very daring and sometimes at such a loss that, in Joanna's words, "she could just pet me and kiss me and draw droll faces at me with the intent to help me through, and when she got me through she went skeer with triumph crying out as she strutted up and down that we were the three wonders of the world."

The whole affair, Dr. John decided, must have been strange enough "to put the wits of any medical onlooker in a creel," and if he let his mind rest on it he would forget how to sleep as well as to practice surgery; so in the name of Charity would I let him sink into the land of Nod for a few hours while I thought out some simple explanation for my glen-folk.

He got his few hours, though sorely did I grudge them, for I was in a creel myself. When he woke refreshed I was by his side to say at once, as if there had not been a moment's interruption, "Of course, she was some neighbor."

There was a glint in his blue eyes now, but he said decisively, "There is no way out by that road, my man; Joanna is aquaint with every neighbor in the glen."

"An outside woman of flesh and blood," I prigged with him, "must have contrived to force the glen; as, after all, you did yourself."

That, he maintained, was even less possible than the other. I was stout for there being some natural explanation, and he reminded me unnecessarily that there was the one Joanna gave. At this I told him sternly to get behind me.

He saw in what distress I was, and, dropping his banter, came bravely to my relief. "Do you really think," he said, in his helpful, confident way, "that I have any more belief in warlocks and 'strangers' than you have yourself? I'll tell you my conclusion, which my sleep makes clearer. It is that Joanna did the whole thing by herself, as many a woman has done before her. She must at some time, though, have been in a trance, which are things I cannot pretend to fathom, and have thought a woman was about her who never came in. It cows to think of Joanna, even in her hour of genius, having such an imagination; that bit about nearly biting the bairn is worthy of Mr. H.'s Spectrum."

"She no doubt got it out of that old story," I said.

"Aye," he granted, "that might account for it. And at any rate, it is of no importance, as we are both agreed that she was by her lonesome self. But what a pity for us to have to let that joyous visitor go down the wind."

It was far from pity to me. I was so thankful to him for getting rid of her that I pressed his hand repeatedly. I was feeling very young.

VI. Superstition and Its Antidote

DEC. 26.—I got as far as the shieling two days behind Joanna's story and held a christening, this being the first at which I have ever officiated. The usual course is to have it in the kirk toward the end of a service, but in urgent cases it may be on the day of birth. There was maybe no reason for precipitancy in this case, the child being lusty, but in the peculiar circumstances I considered it my duty to make her safe.

When I took her in my arms, by far the youngest I had ever meddled with, I was well aware of my youthful presumption. I should have been warned before about the beauty of their fingernails. Yet I dared not let on that I was the most ignorant in the room, for I was the minister, and therefore to be looked up to. Also Joanna repeated her story, with side looks at me as if she had put me in a quandary, and the half dozen present were already familiar with it and were all agog.

So knowing how ill it fares with a minister's usefulness if he does not keep upside with his flock, I was bolder than I felt and told them in a short exposition that there had been no "stranger" in the affair. Otherwise some of them would certainly have seen her in the glen. They all nodded their agreement and thanked me for making it so clear, but I knew in my bones that they did not accept one word of my exposition, though they regarded it as very proper for a minister, especially one who was new to the glen.

This way they have, of heartily accepting what you tell them and then going their own gait, is disheartening to me, and at one time I thought of making the folly about "strangers" a subject of stern discipline from the pulpit. Fear did not enter into my reluctance, for I knew they would esteem me the more I hammered at them, but I drew back from the ease of superiority toward men and women whose simple lives have been so often more grimly fought than my own. It relieves me, therefore, to have decided that I may get through their chinks more creditably in another manner.

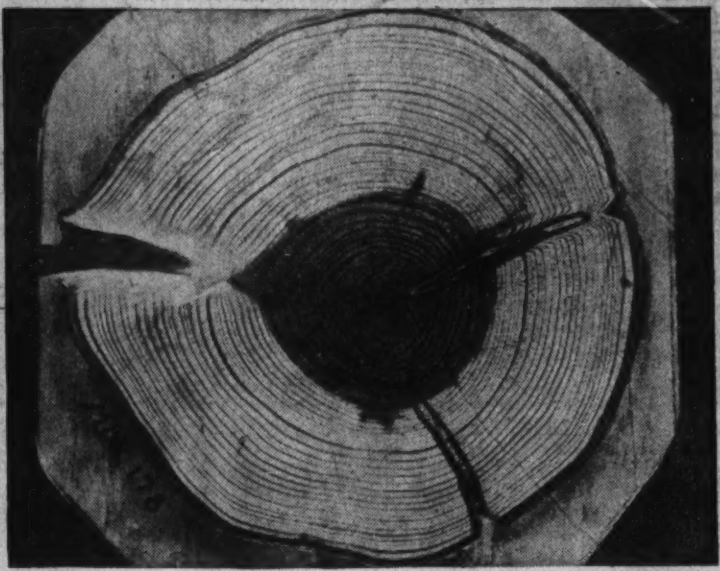
Tree Rings—The Weather Charts of the Centuries

A cross-section of the trunk of a giant California redwood tree, which was a sapling when William the Conqueror invaded England in 1066. The United States forest products laboratory at Madison, Wis., obtained the section of this old tree to study its periods of growth through observation of its rings. While this tree is said to be 868 years old, there are some specimens more than two thousand years older.

Dr. Waldo S. Glock, noted climatologist, and Dr. Andrew E. Douglass (at right), inspecting a cross-section of a California sequoia tree.



A cross-section of a beam of Douglas fir taken from the ruins of a Pueblo Indian dwelling in northern Arizona. A skeleton plot, or graph, is charted of this tree's annual rings. This skeleton plot is placed on the regional standard, or master chart, and dated.

WHAT kind of a winter did the Indians have in 1492? Was 100 B. C., the year of the birth of Julius Cæsar, a dry and cold one for America, or a warm and rainy one? Were there great droughts or great deluges in prehistoric times?

Silly questions? Maybe. But perhaps not really ridiculous when one ponders the wealth of scientific data that an Arizona professor has been piling up through reading the records of the centuries in the concentric rings in the trunks of trees. Through examination of great trees of the west and northwest, which have stood for one, two, and three thousand years, through careful examination of old wooden beams found in ruins of the homes of prehistoric people in the southwest, and through study of petrified trees, some believed to be 50,000 years old, Dr. Andrew E. Douglass, professor of astronomy at the University of Arizona, is plotting the major weather and climatic cycles of the past. The work of Dr. Douglass has been recognized as of tangible assistance to archeology and of potential commercial value.

A cross section of any tree trunk reveals concentric rings, which actually are the grain of the wood. In some woods the rings are plainer than in others. The combination of one white ring with its outer dark ring represents one year's growth of the tree. The white wood, or cellulose layer, stands for the spring season growth, which takes place after the winter snows melt and when the sap is flowing freely. In the autumn nature prepares the tree trunk for the approaching winter by forming a dark, strong layer, called lignin, around the tree to protect it from the cold. The dark layer is the dark ring in the tree trunk. If the winter snows are heavy and the spring season a wet one the white ring is wide. If the season is dry the white ring is narrow. Thus from the width of the white rings in the tree trunk the scientist determines the amount of the annual rainfall in the region in which the tree grew.

The best interpretations come from the coniferous trees, especially the pines and Douglas fir. Some of the huge California trees, the sequoias and giant redwoods, present interesting studies. One specimen showed the tree to be more than 3,000 years old.

In the case of the petrified redwood trees, dating back probably 50,000 years, a study may reveal the climatic cycles of the world, in that dim past, to have been similar in their extremes to the cycles of modern times. It has been suggested that a scientific record of the weather variations for thousands of years may be helpful in the forecasting of future climatic cycles.

By comparison of the rings of a great number of trees the scientist, it is seen, may be able to fix season dates definitely on his master chart of the centuries.

Cross-dating of tree rings, by which means their records are carried back hundreds of years, may be explained as follows:

Close examination of a tree log (especially pine) will show certain sequences of wet and dry years. These sequences may be for three years, for five years, thirteen years, or for any number of years. One definite seven year sequence, for example, on one tree in its youth may correspond with the same sequence on another tree in its old age. By putting on paper the skeleton plot, or graphic history, of the first tree, and making its sequence coincide with identical sequence on the other tree, the readings may be carried back to years before the first tree was in existence. It is something like using a sliding rule. And so if tree No. 3 is older than tree No. 2, the cross-dating is carried back still farther.

During his researches, Dr. Douglass has invented an optical instrument, which he calls a cyclograph, and which reads the major weather cycles visually without the necessity of resorting to tedious mathematical acrobatics.

Dr. Douglass started his tree ring investigations in 1901. Since then he has studied hundreds of logs. His master chart, the key to all of his investigations, has never been presented to the public.

A Real Marvel at Memorizing

(Acme photo.)

THE human brain is a marvelous apparatus, capable of performing astounding tricks when it is trained along specialized lines. Not all minds are equal to carrying the maximum load, yet memory is something that can be developed by almost every one. Many are the stories of unusual minds. Men and women have trained their minds to such a degree that they can put away a thought in the recesses of the thinking apparatus and call it back at any time. There was once a mathematical wizard, a young chap who was rather stupid in other respects, who could stand beside a railway track while a long freight train was passing by, jot down in his brain the numbers of every box car, and after the train had passed recite the long list of five and six cipher numbers without one error. Memory experts have done some remarkable work in memorizing whole books, long legal instruments, and other literature. In the case of military spies it is often necessary for them to memorize secret orders so that they cannot be caught with written evidence on their persons. Pictured here is a young woman, Mme. Bessy Neumann, who has memorized the Old Testament and can recite it from beginning to end. She now is learning Shakespeare's plays by heart.

Legal Documents of an Ancient People

NORTHERN Mesopotamia, which is now a desert country inhabited largely by nomadic tribesmen, 3,500 years ago was the center of the highest type of culture of that age. Great cities flourished in that land, and the people were so far advanced intellectually that they had a complete written language. They had their own code of laws and carried on an important commerce. All of the writings, which included religious documents, royal proclamations, and legal instruments, were recorded on clay tablets through the employment of a writing tool with a tiny triangular face. The clay tablets, after having been inscribed, dried as hard as bricks and became permanent records. Pictured here are two of the ancient tablets, the larger one recording the fact that a farmer had pledged his property for the loan of two pounds of lead and the smaller telling how two brothers had adopted a boy. The tablets were found by archeologists while excavating a mound on the site of the ancient city of Nuzi.

Eight Wheels Safer, Designers Say

(Acme photo.)

THIS eight-wheeled automobile, recently demonstrated in Berlin, is said to perform with exceptional smoothness. It was reported that better balance was obtained by supporting the weight of the car at eight points rather than at four, as is the case with the normal type of automobile. The fact that eight tires are necessary should not be held against it, the designers say, because each tire bears only half the load it would have to carry on the ordinary automobile, and therefore the wear and tear is reduced in proportion. It is claimed that the eight-wheeled car can be operated with greater safety because quick stops are assured by greater braking surface.

When a War Lord Was a Movie Extra

THE former war lord of Soviet Russia, the man who created the Red army, once was a seven-dollar-a-day movie extra in an American motion picture studio, as the accompanying picture reveals. Leon Trotzky, at the right, in a scene with Clara Kimball Young, before the World war was a struggling nonentity, trying his hand at writing, lecturing, and even movie acting to provide means of a livelihood. When czarism crumpled in Russia, because of the defeats by the Germans, and Young Kerensky seized temporary power in the land, Trotzky and his colleague, Lenin, quickly found their way back to their native land and set about building their communistic political party. It wasn't long before the communists were powerful enough to seize the government. Lenin became the leader, and Trotzky the military genius of the country. But Trotzky's decline was almost as rapid as his rise. Lenin died, his war lord was suspected of intriguing against the government, and that was the end of the Lenin-Trotzky combination. Trotzky, a bitter enemy of Joseph Stalin, the present "iron man" of Russia, was packed off into exile. Today he occupies a modest villa on the island of Prinkipo, in the Sea of Marmora, where he is busy writing defenses of himself and attacks on the soviets.

INFRA-RED The Sky Detective

a timing device is connected with the instrument, causing it to move in synchronization with the apparent motion of the stars. Thus the object is kept on the cross-hairs of the instrument at all times, though it is necessary to make very slight readjustments at intervals. A constant check on the focus is made through a supplementary eyepiece.

The picture of the spectroscope shown in another of the accompanying illustrations will help the reader understand the nature of radiations. Some radiations may be discerned by the human eye and some may not, depending upon their wave length. The longest visible radiation is red and the shortest is violet. In between these extremes one may see many shades of orange, yellow, green and blue. There are many other radiations longer than the red and shorter than the violet which are quite invisible. Those which are just too long to be seen are called infra-red, and those which are just too short are called ultra-violet.

The spectroscope is shown breaking up ordinary starlight into its constituent colors—red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, and violet. When sunlight passes through the prism of the spectroscope the rays are refracted at different angles depending upon their length. When these are thrown upon a screen they appear as a graduated scale with red at one end and violet at the other. Above and below this scale, but invisible to the eye, are infra-red rays and ultra-violet rays.

SAFETY EQUIPMENT for NEW YORK POLICEMEN

(Acme photos.)

Members of New York City's emergency police squads, partly and fully equipped with the new safety uniforms that permit them to enter rooms filled with smoke and deadly fumes.

A deputy inspector of an emergency squad inspecting a policeman's oxygen tank.

THE equipment of the modern fire fighter and policeman is growing more and more like that of a deep sea diver. Time was when a policeman was not expected to do anything more than keep order, shoot a bandit now and then, and drag a few boisterous drunks to the station. But times have changed. The policeman of the big city today is expected to rescue pet cats stranded on the tops of telephone poles, act as nursemaid to strayed children, save would-be suicides from drowning in the river, and burst into cellars, warehouses, and other death traps that are filled with smoke or poisonous gas. The last-named is an assignment that no policeman relishes, but he knows his duty and does it, and if he arrives on the scene ahead of the firemen he does not hesitate to sacrifice his life if necessary to save that of some helpless individual overcome by smoke or gas.

In New York City the police department has taken steps to protect members who are called upon to enter various sorts of death traps. Emergency squads have been formed whose duties include just such heroic work as penetrating a room filled with smoke or poisonous fumes. Members of the emergency squads have been outfitted with new uniforms, which resemble, at first glance, the suits worn by sea divers.

The uniforms consist of airtight suits, which exclude all smoke and acrid fumes; helmets, which protect the eyes and the nostrils; and oxygen tanks, which permit the wearer to stay alive and active for more than two hours without rushing out to the open air for relief. It is believed that no job of rescue or salvage should require more than two hours, and even if it does, there are enough men of the emergency squads equipped with safety suits so that they can work in relays.

A part of the equipment consists of a reservoir of chemicals which purifies the air breathed out. The wearer simply adjusts a valve on the oxygen tank to admit sufficient of the life-giving gas to the air within his helmet to meet the requirements of his breathing. If he is caught in a tight place and cannot get out within the time fixed as the usual duration of his oxygen supply, he is advised to lie down and take things easy, as in doing that he can prolong the time safety limit of his equipment. An inactive man requires much less oxygen than one who is moving about.

Unseen Rays as Thief Trap

A RESEARCH engineer of a great electrical and manufacturing company has found a way to protect wall safes and other valuable property with infra-red and ultra-violet rays. The engineer has called his invention "Dick Dead Eye," because, as he says, it always gets its man. The picture here is from a photograph taken by "Dick Dead Eye." The man with the pistol and the flashlight took the role of a burglar for the purpose of demonstrating the new thief detector. The white lines in the picture have been painted in to represent the invisible rays that guard the safe, which also is shown in the picture. By utilizing the most advanced developments of grid glow tubes and photo-electric cells, throwing a network of infra-red and ultra-violet rays around the room in which the safe was located, the engineer produced a foolproof burglar alarm and camera trap. An intruder entering the room through any one of its several doors naturally interrupted one or more of the streams of invisible rays. The breaking of the rays immediately set off an alarm to arouse guards and touched off the cameras which were focused on the doorways. As a result the intruder was frightened away from the safe, and left behind his photograph for identification later.

Where Silence Truly Is Golden

IN THE broad orchards of the monastery of Mariawald, in the Eifel, Germany, the only sounds are the sighing of the winds in the trees and the songs of the birds. The monks who prune the trees and pluck the fruit are the silent monks of Mariawald. Theirs is the strictest Catholic order of penitents in the world. From abbot to lay brother these monks work for a living, always in complete silence. Their food is simple, and their monastic garb may be changed only every eight days. All of the inmates of the monastery sleep together on plain boards in one room. In the accompanying picture is a group of the monks picking fruit in their richly laden orchard.

An Experiment Ending in a Spill

AVIATORS ever are thinking up new ways to obtain thrills and astound spectators. The ordinary parachute leap from a moving plane had become such a tame affair for a Los Angeles airman that he decided recently to make a leap only ten feet from the ground, depending upon the wind from the propeller of his stationary plane, or acroplane, to lift him into the air and allow him to settle gently to the ground. Everything was set for the experiment. The aviator crawled into the fuselage of the acroplane, a device designed to instruct flying students, speeded up the engine, and allowed his parachute to open with the gale created by the whirling propeller blades. But the wind was too strong. The aviator was jerked from his seat in the acroplane and hurled to the ground with terrific force. It seems that the parachute nose-dived instead of filling out smoothly and lifting into the air. The aviator landed upon his head, and was seriously injured. The accompanying picture shows him in midair, a fraction of a second after he had been yanked out of the acroplane by the parack .

The Dance of the Tiger

AT A RECENT festival at San Teotihuacan, Mexico, on the site of one of that country's oldest pyramids, an Indian danced before a large assemblage wearing upon his head a mask which had been found in the ruins of an old Aztec temple. The dance was the dance of the tiger, and the mask he wore was made to resemble the face of some feline beast, possibly the jaguar or the puma, as the tiger, as it is known today, never was found in America. The Aztecs were the most important people of Mexico when Cortez first set foot on its shores. That daring conquistador, with his band of bold warriors, penetrated the country as far as the Aztec capital, which stood near the present site of Mexico City, took the king of the Aztecs prisoner, and finally subdued the people after once suffering an almost overwhelming defeat at their hands. The Aztecs at that time were the most highly developed Indians of the western world. They built great cities and fine temples and had a great store of gold in their possession. Human sacrifice played an important part in their religion, though they lived decently in other respects.

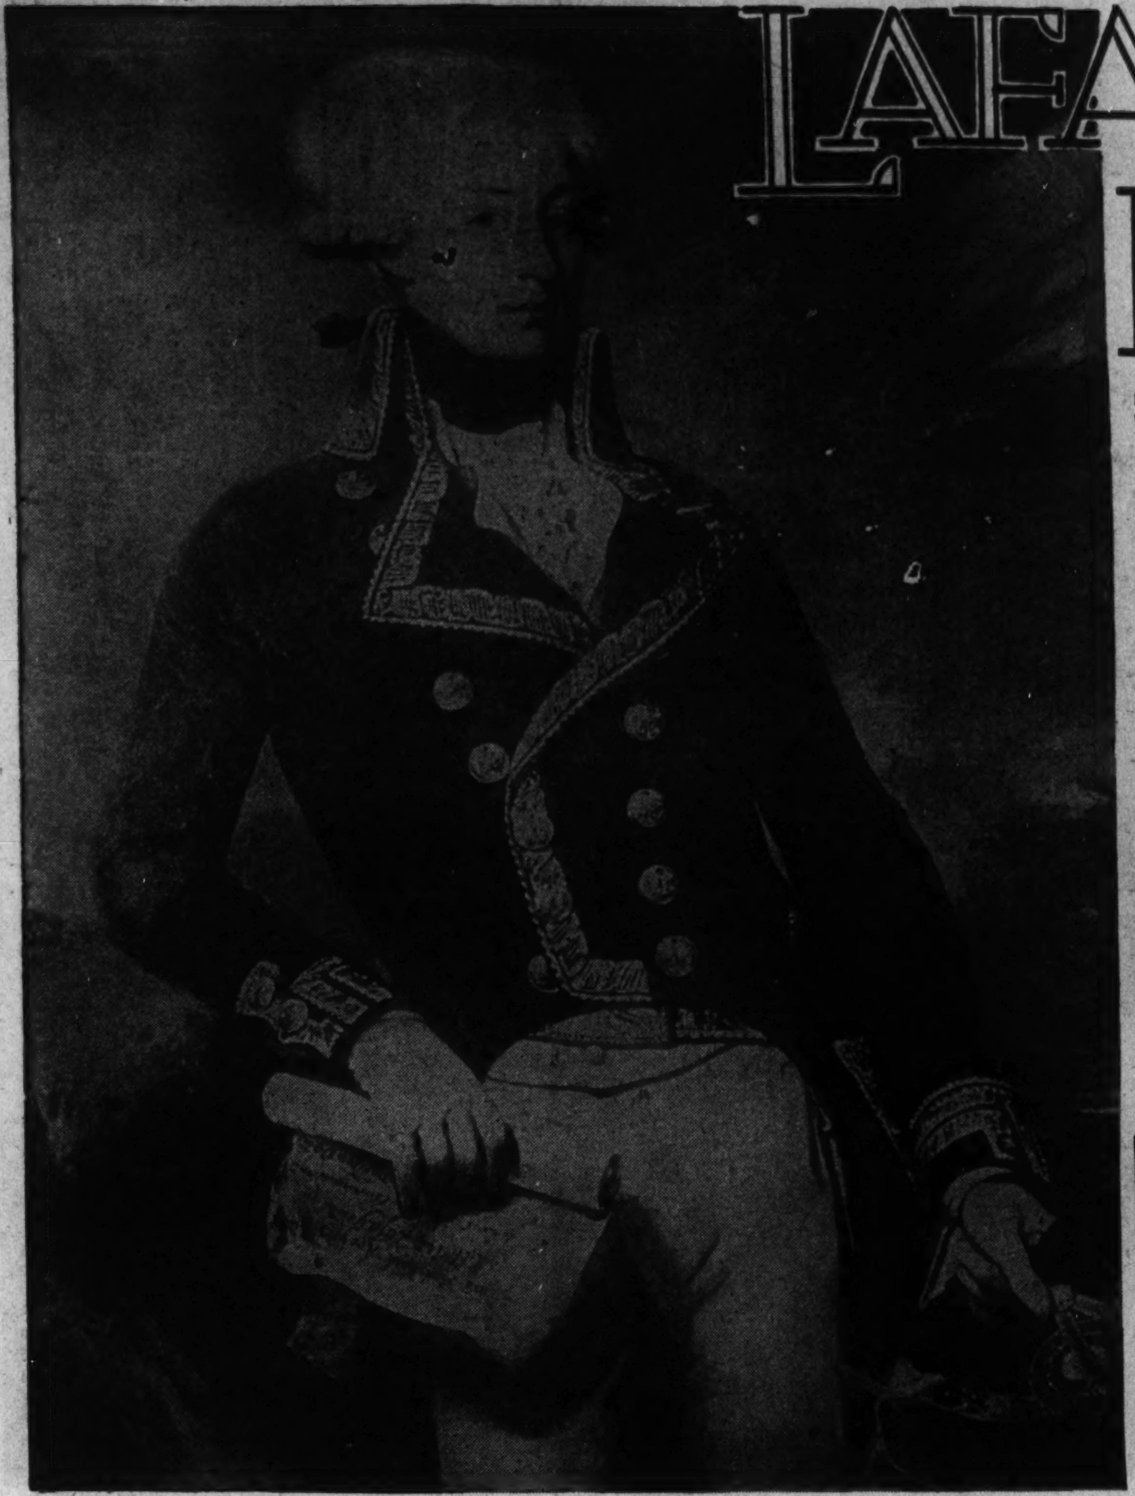
LAFAYETTE'S FAREWELL



Lafayette as he appeared in 1792. This is a reproduction of the painting by Court now in Musee de Versailles. The marquis at that time was 35 years old, and still wore clothing which had been the vogue in France before the revolution.

Lafayette at the age of seven years. Six years after this he was left an immense fortune. He married at the age of sixteen.

By John A. Menaugh

THE approaching anniversary of the death of the Marquis de Lafayette brings again to the minds of the American people, who this year are celebrating the bicentennial of the birth of George Washington, the important part the titled young Frenchman played in establishing this country as a free and independent nation.

Lafayette died ninety-eight years ago next Friday, May 20. Something like ten years before he closed his eyes in eternal sleep the hero of Brandywine, Barren Hill, Monmouth, and Yorktown visited America for the fourth and last time. And what a triumphant visit that was! From the moment he landed from the merchantman Cadmus in New York City until the frigate Brandywine bore him away down the broad estuary of the lower Potomac his visit was a magnificent triumph. Throughout the whole land bands played and militia marched. The country reverberated with the thunder of cannon in salute; great "Welcome Lafayette" arches bridged streets in every city; school children marched and sang; receptions, balls, levees, and theater parties robbed the suave Frenchman of his needed sleep, and men in public life squabbled for the honor of playing host.

Lagrange, the estate of Lafayette in France. It was to this old mansion that the marquis retired after five years of imprisonment in Austria.

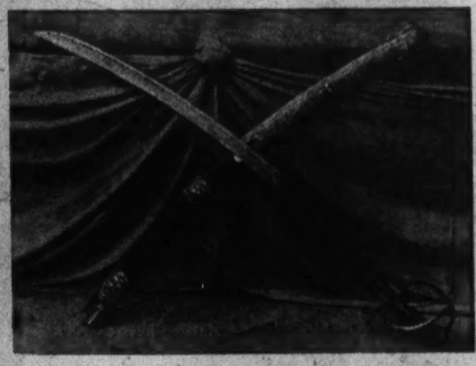
Tombs of Lafayette and his wife in Picpus cemetery, Paris. It was at this shrine of liberty that American officers and soldiers during the World war bowed their heads in homage to the great exponent of independence.

Lafayette landed at New York Aug. 15, 1824, and sailed for France Sept. 7 of the following year. He visited every one of the 24 states, traveling by coach and steamboat. He visited Boston, Hartford, Albany, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Charleston, S. C., Savannah, New Orleans, Natchez, St. Louis, Kaskaskia, Ill., Cincinnati, Wheeling, Washington, and hundreds of other cities and towns. He was the guest of President Monroe and later of President John Quincy Adams. He was entertained by Jefferson, old John Adams, Madison, Andrew Jackson; Joseph Bonaparte, Napoleon's brother (who was living at Bordentown, N. J., at that time); Henry Clay, and Daniel Webster. He was in a steamboat wreck on the Ohio river, and he laid the cornerstone for the monument at the tomb of Baron de Kalb, another revolutionary hero.

At the battlefield of Yorktown Lafayette was established in the house used by Lord Cornwallis, and received war veterans in Washington's campaign tent, which had been brought to the scene for that purpose. A reception to the great Frenchman was lighted by candles left by Cornwallis 43 years before. At Philadelphia Lafayette rode in a barouche drawn by six cream white horses. At Mount Vernon he knelt beside the casket of Washington. The whole country was in a delirium of rejoicing, and everywhere the noted visitor was received he was compelled to gaze at lighted transparencies which depicted one or another of the scenes of his life.



The sword which Lafayette carried throughout the American revolution, when as a youthful major general he played a conspicuous part in defeating the British.

With Lafayette on that historic visit were his son, George Washington Lafayette; his secretary, Auguste Levasseur, and a servant. Even the servant came in for a share of the glory of his famous master.

Though Lafayette refused the offer of a United States war vessel to bring him to America, he consented to return to France on a new frigate named for the first battle in the Revolutionary war in which he took part.

On his return to France from his triumphs in America Lafayette still had an important role in public affairs before death claimed him. In the interests of peace, and ignoring his own preferences, he established Louis Philippe on the throne when Charles X. was deposed. For the second time he assumed the position of commander-in-chief of the national guard. He died in Paris, the acknowledged chief of the constitutional party on the continent of Europe.

Marie Jean Paul Roch Yves Gilbert Motier, Marquis de Lafayette, was born in Cavanac, Auvergne, France, Sept. 6, 1757. At the age of sixteen he married the daughter of the duc d'Ayen. At nineteen he fitted out the ship Victoire at his own expense and sailed to help the Americans in their war with England. Within a few months he was a major general. During the French revolution he fled from the fierce Jacobins and was imprisoned in Austria, where he spent five years in a dungeon. He was liberated through the action of Napoleon, but he ever afterward refused to accept honors at the hands of the Corsican. As a member of the chamber of deputies Lafayette always was ready to lift his voice in the cause of liberty.

Morse, the inventor of the telegraph. It hangs in the governor's room of the city hall in New York and is the property of the city.

"Concealed Weapons"

How the States Wage Relentless War on the Tools of Death

By Whitley Noble

WHEN Caminelleo Vitelli of Pistoia, Italy, made the first pistol in the sixteenth century he started a heap of trouble for modern policemen. The Italian inventor probably saw the hand gun only as a weapon for the glorious profession of war and as an instrument for upholding a man's honor on the field of the duello. Poor old Caminelleo! If he only could return to visit the central station of some big city police department he might see weapons by the bushel baskets, hundreds of pistols, revolvers, sawed-off shotguns, machine guns, and other death-dealing instruments of all descriptions that had been gathered in by guardians of the law. These would be the weapons seized by the police in their sorties through the haunts of gangland, the arms removed from the pockets of gun toters, the implements of death, destruction, robbery, blackmail, kidnaping, and booze running. Many of the guns would stand for foul murder, cowardly assassination, and merciless shots in the dark.

It is the policeman's business to collect guns. The laws of virtually every state require that he shall make it one of his most important tasks to be ever on the lookout for the gunman, ever prepared to take the weapon from some potential murderer.

So the concealed weapon problem has grown to be a vital one in every country, but especially in the United States, where pistols and revolvers are easily acquired, despite strict laws, and where the people are more or less familiar with the use of firearms, a proficiency handed down from the pioneers.

The people are divided roughly into three groups on the question of concealed weapons. The larger group, which includes the police and millions of others interested in law enforcement, is for drastic regulation The second group, which includes sportsmen and those perhaps more liberal on the question of weapon ownership, is for less drastic laws and regulations. This group contends that the anti-pistol laws disarm the honest man of means of defense but do not keep the crooks from having weapons, always citing the third amendment to the constitution, which says:

"A well regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed."

The third group includes those who have no respect for the law. The crook doesn't care much either way and carries a gun as a useful tool in his trade.

In all of the states of the Union there has been at least perfunctory legislation against carrying concealed weapons. A number of states have passed new regulatory statutes within the last two years. Illinois, for instance, on June 29, 1931, established a law regulating the carrying of firearms and making it a misdemeanor to alter or eradicate the manufacturer's number on a weapon. On July 2 of the same year a law was passed prohibiting within the state the sale, possession, and transportation of machine guns. California covers the subject of concealed weapons with complete statutes on manufacture, sale, transportation, and possession of firearms.

Other states which have enacted laws recently to regulate, restrict, or prohibit the carrying of weapons or the sale of such are Mississippi, New Jersey, Virginia, Delaware, Iowa, Michigan, New York, North Carolina, Oregon, and West Virginia. On May 6, 1930, Porto Rico passed a law providing for a license tax on retail dealers in firearms. In many of the foreign countries, especially those of Europe, it is unlawful to possess weapons without an official permit.

The United States federal government on Feb. 8, 1927, adopted a law restricting the sending of firearms, capable of being concealed, through the mails. There were said to have been only 27 arrests last year for violation of this law, despite the claim that many arms were sent through the mails by "bootleg" dealers to persons not legally entitled to receive them.

Showing that congressmen are extremely careful of their own lives is the law enacted in 1882 forbidding the discharge of firearms on the capitol grounds. There is no federal law against carrying concealed weapons.

These weapons, 57 pistols, four shotguns, two rifles and two sub-machine guns, were the total haul of three raids made by police in Detroit in an effort to stamp out gang warfare there.

When Chicago police killed a notorious gangster they went to his room and found this collection of tools of the gunman's trade, including pistols, guns, bullets, and bulletproof vest. Two officers are shown examining the weapons.

All Comforts of Home on a Cruiser

THE most recent addition to the scouting fleet of the United States navy is the Salt Lake City, a 10,000 ton cruiser which was commissioned in 1929 but which was called back for repairs and revisions. The photographs reproduced on this page show how completely the craft is equipped to meet the daily needs of its crew.

Young men usually join the navy because they have a taste for a roving life, replies to questionnaires indicate, and the designers of modern warships have made it possible for them to gratify those wishes without the discomforts which attended life at sea in the old days. Now the sailors may roam into the most distant waters and still have many of the conveniences which they would enjoy in a metropolitan hotel.

Though the ship is anchored in some sequestered bay of a South Sea archipelago, a gob may secure treatment for an aching tooth as readily as though he were in Chicago or New York. For on the new cruiser there is a dentist's office to which the sailors go for periodical examinations of their teeth. If a member of the crew should be stricken with appendicitis when several hundred miles out at sea, he would be rushed to the ship's operating room, where he would receive as capable attention as he would in a hospital at home.

The weather-beaten sea dogs of other days might be inclined to look askance at sailors of the new generation who sit at the ship's soda fountain and toy with dainty chocolate sundaes. But the way in which the modern gobs can stow away virile hamburger sandwiches at that same soda fountain may be depended upon to regain the respect of the old salts.

The variety of shops and stores aboard the present-day warship makes the craft a little community in itself, capable of going about its business for weeks at a time cut off from the rest of the world. The ship's laundry takes care of the sailor's washing for 75 cents a month.

A barber shop makes it possible for him to be well groomed on all occasions, and a cobbler keeps his shoes in good repair. All of these activities are conducted by men who had experience in trades before joining the navy.

The ship's photographer provides the sailor with pictures which he can send to the folks back home or stow away in his album. He is kept in touch with world events by a daily news sheet which contains information picked up by radio, and once a week a more elaborate publication, written and edited by members of the crew, gives a digest and editorial comment upon recent happenings. Bits of fiction and verse enliven the paper.

The sailor usually stands eight hours of watches out of the twenty-four, and these may come at any time of the day or night. Scrubbing decks, washing paintwork, preparing food, polishing metal in the engine room, gun drills, schooling, and other miscellaneous occupations keep him busy while he is on duty. Then there is relaxation and recreation until it's time to turn into his bunk.

Winter's Magic Touch to a Mountain Top

NEWLY fallen snow can work magic with a beautiful natural scene. Bold rock formations surrounded by barren hardwoods, with golden leaves still clinging to them, and stately conifers are made all the more beautiful by the clinging crystals of clean white snow. The accompanying picture of natural grandeur was photographed recently at the top of Rib mountain, near Wausau, Wis., directly after a snowstorm, and shows the trees still mantled in white. Rib mountain is the highest point in the state of Wisconsin, having an elevation of 1,940 feet. Clouds hang over the top of the mountain and freezing weather arrives there before it is felt in the adjoining valleys. The road to the mountain top is kept open throughout the winter so that motorists can drive their cars to the lofty spot to enjoy the scenery.

Conquering Smoke with Steam

RAILROAD companies for many years have sought an efficient method to combat the smoke evil. On nearly all of the lines in the United States bituminous coal is the principal fuel, and where bituminous coal is used there is certain to be a considerable amount of smoke. Clouds of smoke are objectionable from every standpoint—that of the company which operates the train, that of the passengers, and that of the dwellers along the right of way. The late Theodor Langer, a European engineer, invented a device before his death to eliminate smoke produced by a railway locomotive. Pictured here is Langer's invention being put to use. The invention consists of a steam chamber directly over the firebox of the engine, with a jet leading upward at the rear of the locomotive. The engineer opens the jet and allows a column of steam to rise into the smoke cloud which is pouring out the funnel of the engine. The steam column liberated through the jet dissipates the smoke, as is shown in the accompanying picture.

To the Tourist in Paris He Is and Was a Horrendous Figure, This Legendary Fellow; the Truth Is, He Never Really Existed at All

By Clark Wilson

THE more gullible tourists of today, eager to take part in the sophisticated wickedness which they imagine to be an expression of the true spirit of Paris, seek out the haunts of the Apaches, expecting to find the glamorous characters portrayed by pre-war romanticists. They are guided to some reeking cafe, and there they witness a display which is a brazen fake.

An ordinary hoodlum and his female partner whirl through a dance in which the woman is treated in accordance with the overadvertised Apache formula, "Beat a girl and she will love you." Lolling about in miscellaneous attitudes of abandon are several other slovenly frauds who are paid, like the dancers, by the management of the resort. Cafe operators are willing to meet the tourist demand for Apaches, even if it is necessary to hire bums and attire them in costumes prescribed by novelists.

It was conventional to portray the Paris of pre-war days as a city of glamor, in which the most banal character was romantic. Thus every grown-up child who daubed colors upon canvas was a painter; every incompetent who scribbled words upon the back of an unpaid bill was a poet; anyone who sawed on a fiddle in a dismal garret was a musician, and the most ordinary hoodlum was an Apache.

As these people claimed that artistic and romantic temperament excused them from the most fundamental obligations, they could not be held responsible for their actions, for their room rent, or even for their gambling debts. They were like children living in a realm of fantasy.

But the guns of the World war did more than demolish fortifications. They knocked down the castles in the air which had been the refuges of the artists and the Apaches. The would-be painter was deprived of his brushes, the bogus poet of his pencil, the Apache of his dagger—and all were given rifles.

When the fighting was over the Apache found that his status was changed entirely. Previously he had been an object of awe to pasty-faced clerks and harassed bookkeepers all over the world. But in the course of the war the clerk and the bookkeeper stood side by side with the Apache and watched dawn break over No Man's land. Together they heard the barrage begin and waited elbow to elbow for a signal from those officers who were looking so calmly at their wrist watches. Together they crawled out of their trenches and advanced upon the machine guns which were spitting bullets from the lines of the enemy. Thus clerks and bookkeepers proved that Apaches were not the only hard-boiled eggs.

Not that the Apaches were poor soldiers. As a matter of fact, they acquitted themselves well when they were rushed out to the front line trenches to repulse the first great German advance on Paris. At that time the armies were facing each other at the Marne, prepared for a crucial battle. The Germans felt sure that one good push would land them in the streets of Paris.

In this crisis every Parisian who could bear arms was rounded up. Motormen were taken from their trams, clerks from their desks, and bartenders from their cafes. Down into the slums the recruiting officers went, gathering in all the cutthroats, thieves, and drunkards they could find. The jails were opened and the prisoners were told that now they were soldiers. This nondescript army was equipped with guns, piled into taxicabs, and driven to the trenches. The German advance was stopped.

In comparison with the carnage and pillage of the war the petty violence and purse-snatching of the Apache seemed so puny that people came to regard him as a minor hoodlum.

Once long ago there was a great man who was numbered among the ne'er-do-wells of Paris. He was a scoundrel of the lowest order—a sneak-thief, a drunkard, a gallows-bird—but he also was a very fine poet. His genius never carried him up from the slums, because it was in the gutters that he really belonged. He would not have been happy anywhere else, nor would he have been able to exercise his art in the midst of splendor and prosperity. Some of his greatest verses were composed while shivering in some damp and filthy dungeon awaiting a summons to the gallows.

More than once he worked through the night upon a splendid poem with the expectation of meeting the hangman at dawn. But each time he was saved by some trick of fate or some concession on the part of the authorities, and while still comparatively young he was banished from the city. On a bleak winter day he went out from the gates of Paris and vanished from history. No man knows how he met his end, but many have read his verses. He was Francois Villon.

People of the present day, in search of romance and color, are all too ready to see in the common sneak-thief a member of Villon's company. They must surround the criminal with glamor, so they have invented the myth of the Apache.

Consider the origin of an Apache. A country boy leaves home and comes to seek work in the city of Paris. He is unsuccessful in his quest, and day by day he sees his funds grow less. Presently his money is insufficient to buy food, and his room rent is long overdue. Then his landlady ejects him from the lodgings. Brooding over his ill fortune, he wanders through the dirty, twisting streets of the Paris slums. He thinks of returning to the green fields and the little cottage where his family dwells, but he is unwilling to go home and admit defeat. By this time he is hungry. So somewhere he obtains a weapon and becomes a cutthroat.

Crime brings him into contact with others like himself, fear and hatred of the authorities being a common bond. He makes friends with men and women of the streets, and in their company he seeks out low resorts in cellar cafes, where they plan new depredations over glasses of wine.

These characters furnish writers and artists with much material, and a great many popular misapprehensions have grown up around them. There was a time when everyone who went to Paris felt that his visit would be incomplete unless he visited an Apache haunt. The Apache became a glamorous person and remained such until the war proved that he was no tougher than anyone else.

In the Paris of today the old-time Apaches are few and scattered. A trip to one of their resorts will take the visitor down a twisting street so narrow that scarcely a star can be seen between the slanting roofs. The way is very dimly lighted, and the windows of most of the houses are darkened. In shadowy doorways people stand talking, and occasionally a drunken man or woman lurches by.

On rare occasions a woman may come running from some house with a man in pursuit. He will overtake her and begin beating her, while the onlookers remain impassive. Then there will be low warnings, "The police!" and the couple will scurry back into their house to resume their quarrel without danger of being disturbed.

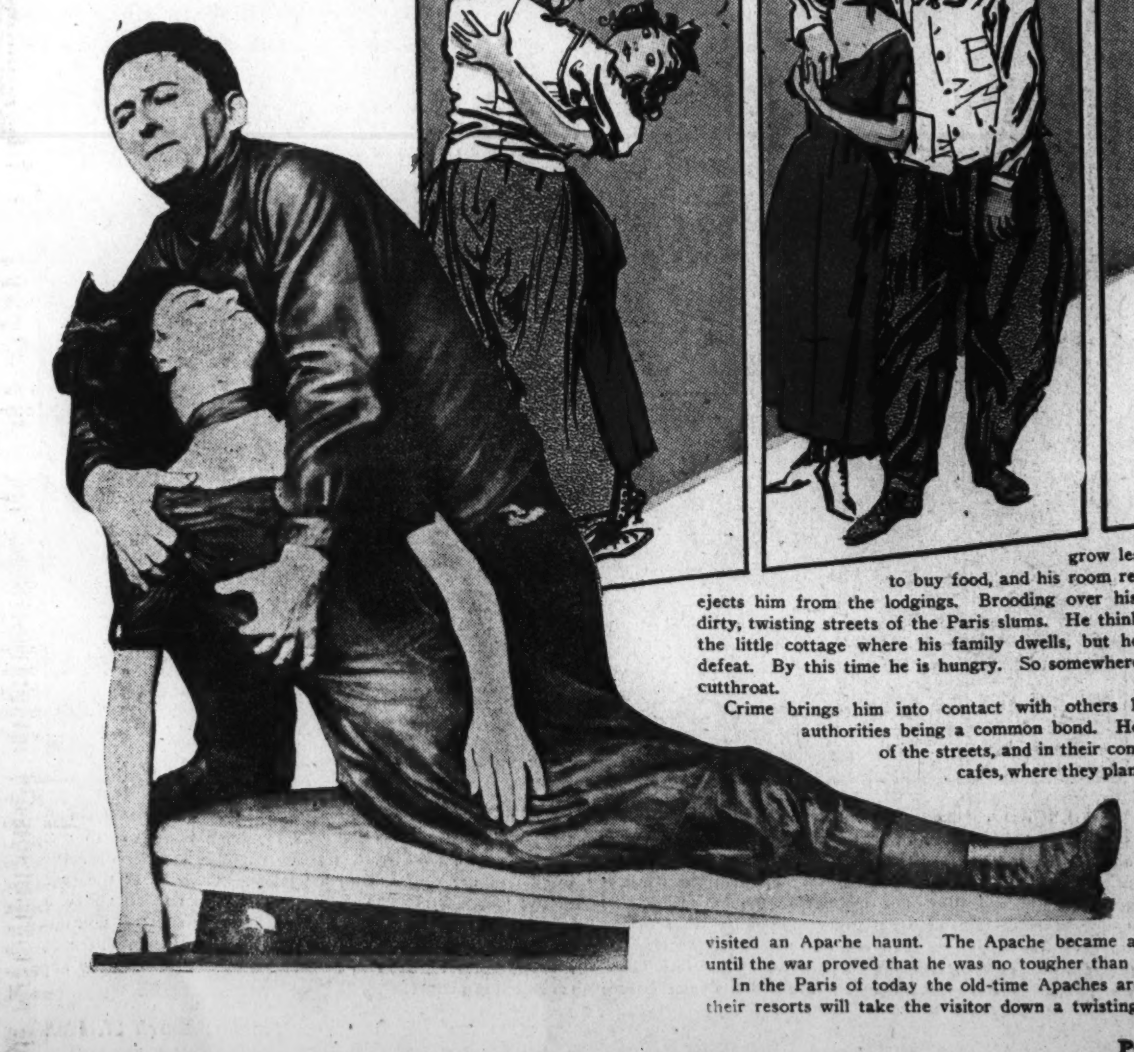
Presently the visitor reaches the entrance of the resort which he is seeking. He goes into a cafe, the walls of which are hung with garish drawings, and makes his way to the back, where he descends a curving stone stairway so narrow that there is scarcely room for one person. At the foot of the steps he enters a low ceilinged room which resembles a vault and comes upon a scene which has more of dirt and squalor than romance.

Through a haze of smoke he sees a few sinister men and women seated at tables. At first they eye him with suspicion, then with indifference. One or two of the women may have a certain coarse gracefulness and show a measure of good judgment in the choice of color in dresses. But all in all there will be little to distinguish the place from a Bowery speakeasy or an East London pub except the fact that it will be somewhat dirtier.

Thus there is little but squalor left in the old Apache haunts—if, indeed, there was much more than squalor to begin with. The modern cabaret operator has an astute eye for business and knows that a certain percentage of the tourists who visit Paris believe that the Apaches are characteristic of the city. If they do not see a few of these men and women they feel that they have missed something essential.

In this dilemma the far-sighted cafe proprietor comes to their aid. It is a simple matter for him to hire several persons to take the roles of Apaches. These men and women thereby earn a few francs, the proprietor increases his business, and the tourists see what they want to see. So everybody is happy.

In the illustrations: Various phases of the famous "Apache dance," through its capricious stages of masterful wooing and vicious brutality to a final scene (depicted at the lower left hand corner of the page) wherein the Apache, having "slain" his dancing partner, clasps her lifeless form to his breast in a fit of remorse.



IMPERIAL INDIGESTION

King Alexander, Occupying a Wobbly Throne, Is Preoccupied with a Stomach Disorder; and Jugo-Slavia Is Similarly Disturbed, but with Political Gastritis

By W. Kent Jenkins

RESTLESS Jugo-Slavia is racked with indigestion, physical and political. King Alexander's stomach is a problem to medical men and the affairs of his country are of much concern to potentates and financiers throughout Europe. Reports emanating from Jugo-Slavia picture the king, ever in danger of assassination, pacing the floors of his fortress-palace through the long hours of the night and pausing to ask of an officer of the guard, "Do you think the prime minister will betray me?"

The palace is built to withstand heavy shellfire and is fitted with machine gun emplacements which would enable a handful of loyal retainers to hold a battalion at bay. Around the structure are the royal guards, who are not merely soldiers on parade, but a powerful army within an army—a division with full equipment including artillery and planes.

One may wonder what is the reason for all this apprehension and preparedness. These are no idle imaginations which haunt the ruler. If he were attacked by his numerous enemies it would not be the first time that violence has been used against the reigning family. The previous dynasty, that of the Obrenovitchs, ended with the murder of King Alexander and his queen, Draga. That was nearly thirty years ago, but the knowledge that at any time he is in danger of a similar fate is always in the mind of the present ruler.

Peter, of the family of Karageorgevitch, became king in 1903, a few months after the assassination. He controlled the destiny of his country during the World war, but was forced to flee to Salonika when fortune turned against the Serbs. In 1919 he relinquished the cares of state to his son, Alexander, who became king upon the death of Peter in 1921.

King Peter (indicated by arrow) preparing to flee from Serbia in an ox cart after the fortunes of war had turned against his countrymen.

A recent increase in the restlessness of Jugo-Slavia has given rise to rumors that the king is preparing to give up his throne. One London newspaper even circulated a report that Prince Arthur of Connaught, a cousin of King George, was to be offered the crown. This report, however, was denied in official circles.

Shortly after taking the throne, Alexander married Princess Marie of Roumania. They have three children.

Since early in his reign, Alexander has had a stormy career. His elder brother, Prince George, renounced his right to the throne of Serbia in 1909 following an altercation with King Peter, but when Jugo-Slavia was formed out of Serbia, Croatia, and Slovenia, he contended that he had not relinquished his claim to the crown of the new kingdom but simply to that of Serbia. In 1925 he came out actively against Alexander and started negotiating with the republicans. The king became alarmed at his brother's movements, and for the last few years George has not been much in evidence. He is said to be detained in a sanitarium where he is virtually a prisoner.

Another gesture against the rule of Alexander was the threat of a taxicab driver to seize the throne. This man was Prince Alexander Dabischa-Kotromanich, who claimed to be a descendant of the Kotromanich family which reigned in what is now Jugo-Slavia between the years 1163 and 1443.

Until two weeks before the prince announced his intentions, he was earning a livelihood by driving a taxi in Berlin. His wife, Princess Ariadne, of the prominent Roumanian family of Cantacuzene, shared the meager living. At first his effort was said to have the backing of powerful financial interests, but eventually it came to nothing.

The Kotromanich dynasty is much older than either the Karageorgevitch or Obrenovitch dynasties, which have been alternating upon the throne of Serbia in more recent times. When the Turks overran Jugo-Slavia, the Kotromanichs left and settled first in Austria and then in Russia.

A circumstance which at the same time gives weakness and strength to Alexander's regime is the fact that he is attempting to weld eight different branches of the Slavic race into one nation. It is a weakness because these factions are unwilling to forget their numerous antagonisms and get together. It is a source of strength because they will not unite against the king. Thus the monarch is able to pit one against the other to his own advantage.

A British Prince Is Not to Be Called to Rule the Serbs; but His Majesty May Have Another Successor

The interminable quibblings of the various factions is said to be a source of sincere distress to the king, however, and in a moment of dejection he has lamented that he is the only Jugo-Slav in the entire country, all the rest considering themselves Serbs, or Croats, or Slovenes.

Alexander never has been a puppet monarch. From the very beginning of his reign he made it clear that he, and not his ministers, was boss. When the country became extremely turbulent he established himself as dictator in January, 1929, but he said that this was only a tempopary measure and that in due time he would give the people another constitution. Accordingly he came out last September with an entirely new constitution, which established a bicameral parliament and professed to put a great deal of power into the hands of the people.

Members of the opposition, however, maintain that the constitution is intended merely to throw dust in the eyes of the world, and that as a matter of fact Alexander is just as much of a dictator as ever.

The king is said to have lost much of his popularity since the promulgation of the new constitution. There have been student demonstrations led by Serbs, Montenegrins and Bosnians, who formerly were among the king's most loyal subjects.

Some of the people were angered by the message with which Alexander opened the new parliament. It omitted any mention to a return to free speech and free press, summing up the dictatorship with the remark that the king was sure everybody had been happy under his regime during the preceding three years.

Some Serbians describe the new state of affairs as a "constitutional dictatorship." The government is said to be attempting to stifle all independent expression among the heterogeneous racial groups.

Some observers say that in giving up the personal dictatorship which he had exercised for three years, Alexander was making a bid for favor in America in preparation for asking a large loan. It is said that he was working on the theory that Americans are unwilling to invest money in dictatorships.

It is believed that international financiers exerted their influence to bring about the abolition of the dictatorship. Shortly before the new constitution was drafted, Foreign Minister Marinkovitch received from the world bank assurance that Jugo-Slavia would be granted a loan of $16,000,000. Between the lines of the new constitution many observers read in invisible ink the story of a duel for power between King Alexander and his prime minister, Gen. Peter Zhivkovitch, who is said to cherish dictatorial ambitions himself.

How the Pharaohs Lived

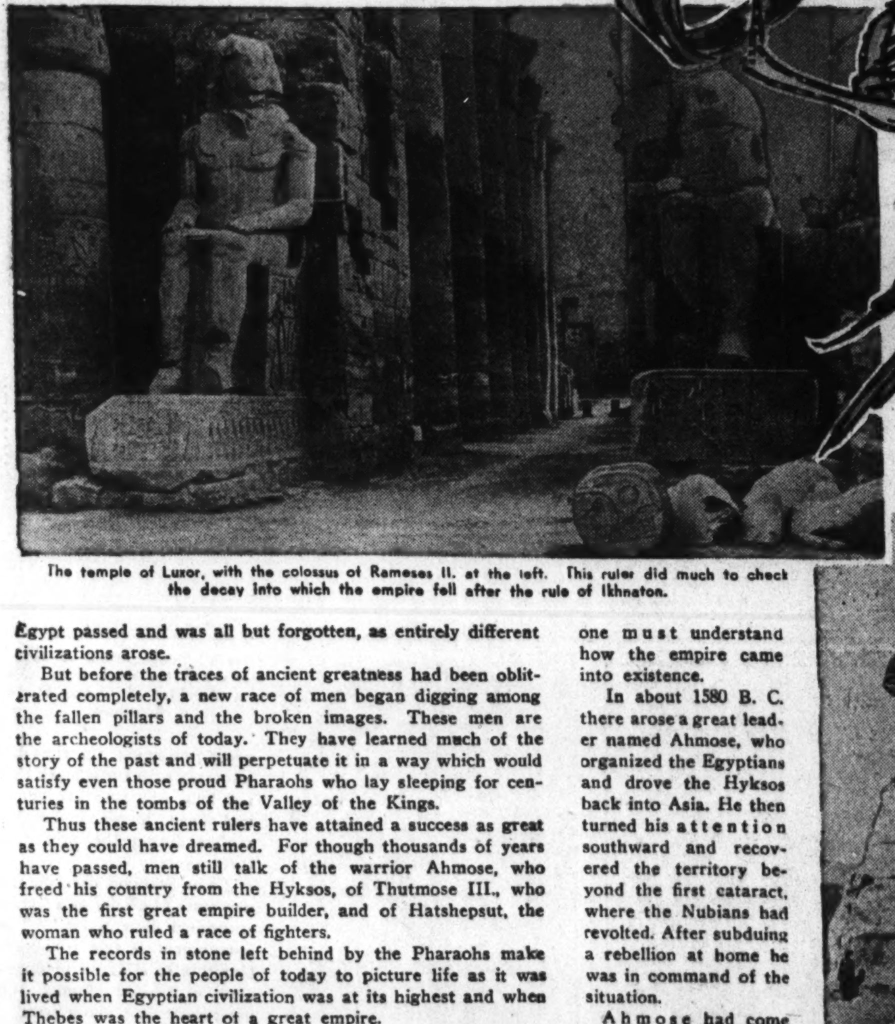
In the Colossal Ruins of Egypt the Scientist Reads the Story of Ancient Royal Glory

By Howard Barry

THE traveler who wanders down the dead streets of Thebes cannot but feel how the rulers of this lost empire must have feared oblivion. On every hand he sees evidence of tremendous labors to perpetuate names and the memory of deeds. No column could be too thick, no capital too broad, no block of stone too massive to suit the architects of Egypt. For when they built, it was with the idea that they built forever.

The records of conquest were carved upon the walls of temples; figures of kings were chiseled from blocks of stone; and palaces were designed to stand for all time. The Pharaohs hewed their own tombs from solid rock and inscribed the stories of their lives upon the walls. And when they died their bodies were mummified in an effort to stave off the final return to dust.

But these men seemed destined to fail in their attempts to immortalize their names and their deeds. For in the course of centuries the inevitable decay set in. The temples collapsed, the statues tumbled from their pedestals, and the sands of the neighboring desert drifted in to cover many of the ruins. The glory of Egypt passed and was all but forgotten, as entirely different civilizations arose.



The temple of Luxor, with the colossus of Rameses II. at the left. This ruler did much to check the decay into which the empire fell after the rule of Ikhnaton.

But before the traces of ancient greatness had been obliterated completely, a new race of men began digging among the fallen pillars and the broken images. These men are the archeologists of today. They have learned much of the story of the past and will perpetuate it in a way which would satisfy even those proud Pharaohs who lay sleeping for centuries in the tombs of the Valley of the Kings.

Thus these ancient rulers have attained a success as great as they could have dreamed. For though thousands of years have passed, men still talk of the warrior Ahmose, who freed his country from the Hyksos, of Thutmose III., who was the first great empire builder, and of Hatshepsut, the woman who ruled a race of fighters.

The records in stone left behind by the Pharaohs make it possible for the people of today to picture life as it was lived when Egyptian civilization was at its highest and when Thebes was the heart of a great empire.

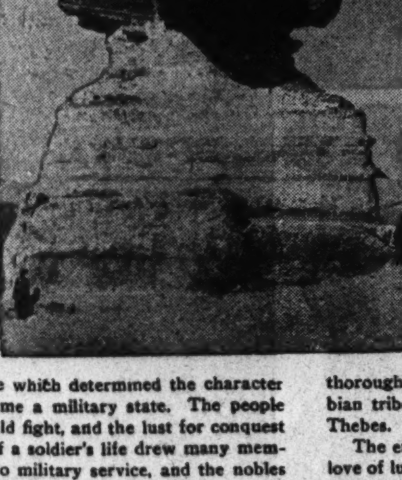
In those days, one standing on the high ground to the east of the Nile and looking down into the valley, saw the magnificent temple of Karnak at his feet and the temple of Luxor up the river to the left. On both banks of the river were thriving city streets. Westward could be seen the colossal statues of Amenhotep III., rising 70 feet above the plain, and far off against the cliffs appeared the temple of Queen Hatshepsut. Back of those cliffs which rose so sharply on the western horizon, the observer knew that Egypt's greatest rulers lay buried in the tombs of the Valley of the Kings.

Along the river stately barges passed and repassed, and in the streets were warriors, priests, craftsmen, and traders

Egypt had thrown off the rule of the Hyksos. It had extended its boundaries southward into Nubia and northeastward to the Euphrates. Its fleets ruled the Aegean sea. From the provinces wealth was pouring in. Merchants had sailed to the city of Punt, on the shores of the Red sea, and had returned with precious oriental products which the Egyptians had lacked since the fall of the Middle Kingdom.

To understand the life which went on in Egypt during its greatest years—from the 16th to the 12th century B. C.—one must understand how the empire came into existence.

In about 1580 B. C. there arose a great leader named Ahmose, who organized the Egyptians and drove the Hyksos back into Asia. He then turned his attention southward and recovered the territory beyond the first cataract, where the Nubians had revolted. After subduing a rebellion at home he was in command of the situation.



At left: The sphinx at Gizeh, a memorial to King Khafre, guarding the pyramid in which the monarch was buried. It is one of the marvels of ancient architecture.

Ahmose had come into power by the sword, and it was this circumstance which determined the character of the new Egypt. It became a military state. The people had found out that they could fight, and the lust for conquest was strong. The rewards of a soldier's life drew many members of the middle class into military service, and the nobles came to regard the profession of arms as the most attractive of careers.

Amenhotep I., son of Ahmose, took up the work of conquest. He subdued a fresh outburst of the Nubians in the south and then drove the Libyans from the western part of the delta land at the mouth of the Nile. After thus making his frontiers secure, he carried the war into Asia and is believed to have penetrated to the Euphrates.

Thutmose I. added to the military glory of Egypt. His daughter, Hatshepsut, followed him to the throne. In spite of the Egyptians' aversion to being governed by a woman, she was elevated to the highest position because she was the only descendant of Ahmose, the country's deliverer.

After Hatshepsut's death, her husband, Thutmose III., took over the power and became the first great empire builder. He consolidated the unruly cities of western Asia, thoroughly subdued the stormy Nubian tribesmen, and united all under Thebes.

The emperor who had the greatest love of luxury and magnificence probably was Amenhotep III. Wealth obtained by conquest brought Egypt opportunities for grandeur unknown before, and Amenhotep made good use of the funds in embellishing the city.

Under his son, Amenhotep IV., who later took the name Ikhnaton, the empire began to decay. Dissension was caused by the king's policy of doing away with all deities but the sun-god.

After Ikhnaton's death, Seti I. and Rameses II. partially restored the greatness of the empire. But the army was now made up largely of foreign mercenaries instead of native Egyptians, and it gradually became less able to withstand the pressure upon the frontiers. So when tribes from the north stormed in during the 12th century B. C., the empire fell.

Ruins of one of the temples built 3,000 years ago at Thebes, when that city was the capital of the Egyptian empire.

Ode to May.

Oh glorious May, Oh beautiful May,
I greet thee with this speech,
I welcome every sunshine ray,
That into my heart doth reach.

The blossomed tree, the busy bee,
They all add to thy name,
The joy that lives in the heart of me,
Brings praises of thy fame.

Thy birds' songs keep up the music of the day,
Thy breezes bring the sweet perfume of blossoms my way,
And in thy welcome, too much praise I cannot say,
For, oh, the joys brought, with the coming of the May.

So this is an ode to the beautiful May,
That heralds the coming of summer hours,
That brings joy into each glorious day,
And lends beauty to the birds and flowers.

Mischievous Baby.

"I don't see why she can't stand still until I get her coat buttoned," remarked my impatient sister, "she's just being naughty."

"Let's go, we're all ready," assured Jane.

"Ba, Da, Da, Ma, Ma," was baby's reply.

"Now you stay here while I get the meat," said Jane, as she left baby near the counter of our neighboring store.

Crash! Bang! Crash! One after another the big cans of coffee so neatly arranged on the counter came pounding to the floor. The coffee grains scattered everywhere. Can after can of tea came following. Mixing together it was impossible to separate it and replace it in the cans.

"Oh! You naughty girl," screamed Jane, "look what you have done."

The baby smiled. Clapping her hands she replied, "Ba, Ba, Da, Ma, Ba, Da," and continued to laugh.

"What a mischievous baby," said Jane, half laughing.

A Trip Through the Panama Canal.

Several years ago I had the good fortune of making a trip from Honolulu, Hawaii, to New York through the Panama Canal. Our ship entered the canal at Balboa on the Pacific side. It took the ship seven hours to pass through the canal. Our exit was at Colon.

The canal is known as a lock canal. It means that the water is not level all the way across but one in which the boats are raised by means of locks. There are three locks in all named Gatun, Miraflores, and San Pedro Miguel. The electric locomotives, commonly called "mules," pull the ships through the canal.

The scenery along the canal is very beautiful. I made the trip through the canal on New Year's Day and the weather was just like one of our July days.

My Garden.

As I stood on the portico at Mon Arbe, I was filled with a great sense of peace. The setting sun was spreading its last rays over the garden on which I had worked so hard, and the dwarf cedar trees made rambling shadows in the mystic light.

The purple lilacs' blooms were spread like the most majestic lady's fan, and the dogwood stretched its canine petals toward the dying sun. Amaryllis with their pink and white skirts flaunted themselves along the gray stone flagging of the broad walk; the tall white phlox with rose centers looked bravely toward the long coming night, and the 4 o'clocks had long before closed up their indigo petals.

The divine spirit seemed to prevail in the little garden, and as I stood on that portico, I felt that our Maker had been very bountiful to provide the world with such gardens as the one on my little estate.

Sunbeams in Our Lives.

Sunbeams, sunbeams, shine in early morning.
How can we be so sad when they shine so bright at dawning?
The sunbeams do good all day.
And when they go away at night, they still leave their ray.
Sunbeams always leave their ray behind.
And every one can feel them, even those who are blind.
When the sun sets, its goodness rays about,
And every one is happy when it comes back for its route.
Some people in the summer time, of the sun complain,
But then we are thankful for the cool, refreshing rain.
So let us, like the sunbeams be,
So goodness in us, others can see.

The Pets' Corner

Edited by Ding-How of Hydegre
(Mascot of The Junior Post).

Bow, wow, wow, wow! I went to the Dog Show at the Washington Auditorium so that the readers of the Pets' Corner could know all about it. Hop Toy was there, too, but he had better hurry with his story if he wants to get it in this corner.

I was real proud of Patrick Irish Wolf Hound Moffet, who has a show name of Terry O'Day, or something like that. He certainly behaved well and was as proud of Beverly as Beverly was of him.

There was not a single typewriter or eyeglass in the entire place, and of course I felt very proud of myself.

We had a perfectly grand time on our picnic and waded in the water and ate some luncheon and waded again and ate again. Of course, we had ice cream, even if it was a little soft. Bow, wow, wow, wow!

Mr. Tweet Canary did not go because he was afraid to leave his golden bungalow all alone—he has such a valuable store of seeds and cuttlefish and tonic in it. I told him about his cousin, Jenny Wren, who sang so sweetly in the trees, but Mr. Tweet said she would never be an opera singer like he is.

Mrs. Frazer has gone by with all seven of the little Pekinese brothers and sisters who live in her house. They certainly make a lot of noise. When they go up we might let one or two of them be a reporter for this corner, bow wow wow wow wow.

Murphy Fox Terrier Aitchison is going to the circus when it comes here. He told me so and is practicing all kinds of high leaps in the hopes the man who runs the circus will let him travel with them. Bow wow wow! Murphy thinks he would make a good circus performer, but I think he might make a good crooner, for you should certainly hear him yowl.

Mrs. Black Cat takes Purr and Furr for a walk every day along the flower boxes on the veranda. She is writing a story about how well the flowers are growing. Of course they will not grow so well if Purr and Furr insist on playing "ring around a rosy" in the flower boxes all the time.

I have been going to the store every day with Irene just to help out Old Man Economy in our house. I can tell you the prices of everything and the names of everything good to eat. Irene buys a lot of vegetables, but as for me, I am always interested in the meat and candy counters. Of course an editor is more interested in stories than anything else, but we must all eat to live.

Hip, hip, hurrah! I have just been invited on another picnic where the baskets of food are going to be nice and large as those of the last one I went on.

Just got a flash over the Pet's Corner special wire that Patrick Irish Wolf Hound carried away all honors at the show, blue ribbons and so forth and lots of medals. Well, I have a new necktie myself almost every week.

Dear Ding How: I have not written to you for a long time, but don't think I have forgotten you. I read your corner every week and enjoy it very much.

I can do three tricks. I will go get a stick and bring it back to my mistress when she throws it, or carry it around in my mouth and follow her. I can sit up on my hind paws, especially when I want to beg for something to eat, and jump over my mistress' hands. Well, I'll close now, but I am going to write often in the future. Love, LINDY.

Ellen Beaty (age 14),
Savage, Md.

Dear Ding-How:

I am a little fox terrier. My name is Jacky. Last night my mistress had a party. At 7 o'clock the guests arrived. A little girl brought her dog along. I had been told to go in the hall and stand on my hind legs. She put a hat on my head. I was awful curious. I must show off before the other dog. Soon I went into the parlor, took off my hat and passed it around, and barked. They each put a quarter into my hat. After taking the money from the cap I gave it to my mistress. "Thanks for getting the dues for me, Jacky," she said. I barked back. "My, how clever he is," they said. After the meeting I was invited to Vick's party. Vick was one of the dogs present. "You will get plenty of bones and ice cream, Jack," I heard her say. "You see it pays to be smart," my mistress said. The next day I found out that it was a club meeting. Here comes my mistress with some bones. I must get them, so good by.

JACKY.

Thinning Out Watermelon Plants.

"Children, I would like for you to help me on the farm tomorrow," said grandfather one afternoon in the early part of June.

"What do you want us to do" asked Gene, my young brother.

"Thin out the young watermelon plants," answered grandfather.

"We will help you," we said.

When the sun came up the next morning, he found grandfather, Sue and Nina, my sisters; Gene, my brother; Lucy and Julian, my young aunt and uncle, all in the watermelon patch. Grandfather began instructing us. He put each one of us on a separate row and took one himself.

The rows were about 4 feet wide and they were 3 feet apart. Five or six watermelon seeds had been planted together in a bed. The beds were about 6 feet apart. Any one familiar with watermelons will understand why the rows were so far apart and why there is such a distance between the beds. The plants, after being thinned out, begin to have vines on them. The vines grow and grow until you can not walk down a row without fearing you will step on a part of a vine.

The seeds had grown into small plants of 5 and 6 inches in height. Our task was to pull up all but one of the plants in each bed; we were to leave the best and largest of the plants.

The work began! We kept our backs bent, our eyes on the plants, and our hands busy. Soon we came in sight of the end of our rows. Then we started back to the other end of the patch on our second row. Gene got down on his knees, crawling from bed to bed. No one noticed him.

"Well, we are back where we started," said grandfather.

We turned to look over the work we had done and discovered Gene 25 yards from us, on his knees.

"What is the matter with you? Get up," called grandfather.

"My back is feeling terrible," exclaimed Gene, as he finished the rest of his row, walking and walking hurriedly, I assure you.

"Work smart, children, and I will take you fishing Saturday afternoon. While I fish you may go in swimming," said grandfather, turning to go home. He had the rheumatism and could not work so long at a time.

"Oh, boy! Hurrah! Hurrah!" we shouted.

We raced to see who would get to the end of the rows first.

"Let's sit down and get cool," some one suggested.

We went to the spring and sat down on a bank under some shade trees and ate our lunch and then went back to work.

We all grew very tired.

"Let's work a little while longer," I urged, "the bell will ring in a minute or two."

Just then our ears were gladdened by the peals of the old dinner bell. We ran merrily home.

Springtime in the Valley.

I wander in the valley upon a spring morn
Just to see what lingers there.
I see fairies so beautifully adorn
While I gather violets rich and rare.
They dance and sing so gracious and sweetly;
They smile and beg me to join them;
They make me forget all cares completely;
I always remain there until daylight grows dim.

These fairies gay, frolic and play
And smile and dance by the hour.
They are happy and bright day by day,
From early morn until night begins to lower.
They always help me gather gay flowers
And stack the piles high;
They invite me to visit their beautiful towers
While they throw kisses in bidding me good-by.

Spring.

Why not say spring is here?
Don't you see it in the air?
The wind is blowing here and there,
Making tangles in girls' hair.

The greenish sprouts of the stripling corn
Are swaying in the breeze.
Winter on its way has gone—
Now the sprouts can not freeze.

Spring is here! Spring is here!
Bells ring, birdies sing—
All share in children's cheer
In the joys of spring.

A Garden.

I should like a garden, fair,
Where sweet roses scent the air.
Where the silent moonlight creeps
O'er my violets as they sleep.
Where the birds are singing, 'till
The sun brings forth each daffodil.

Where my tigerlilies grow
There some pansy seeds I'll sow.
Where flowers bloom overnight
Into such a tranquil sight
I could make it so sublime
If such a garden could be mine.

ANTOINETTE KLESNER.

Spring.

The twenty-first of March is the first day of spring,
When all the birdies come back again to sing—
When the leaves on the trees are pretty and bright,
Then every one looks at a beautiful sight.

The violets and buttercups come out on the grass,
And we see the golden dandelions
wherever we pass.
Now, this is nature's own work of art
That pleases everyone's heart.

MARJORIE DUVALL (age 12).

To a Bluebird.

Flying high above the trees,
Winging, sailing on the breeze,
There a bird, a bluebird flies;
Singing, calling in the skies.

What a splendid place to be,
Where he can look around and see
The country, as he passes
Over hills, green with grasses.

'Twould be fun, I guess, to fly,
Just beneath the clear blue sky.
But I'M no bird as you can see.
I'm satisfied that I'm just "me."

ANTOINETTE KLESNER.
5217 Reno Road.

Spring in the City.

Oh! Spring has come
Into the busy city, its beauty spreads
Into each tiny nook in some backyard.
A struggling tree bursts into blossom,
Glorifying all the neighborhood;
It steals into the window box of some poor invalid.
And bursts into a glow of color,
Inspiring the hopes of all who see,
And those who are so busy
Pause and reconsider—
After all, life is a grand experience
Where men can live and love.

THE JUNIOR POST AIRSHIP

"I hope we will have a chance to look down on some of the big league baseball games today," said the pilot to the editor as they steered their course over the Navy Yard and the Marine Barracks to circle over Washington before starting on the weekly tour of the world.

"Well, they are all going strong just now, especially our own Senators. It would be great if we could get the pennant this year," said the editor.

"I notice that you slip away to go to a game whenever you can," declared the pilot. "You must be quite a fan."

"Well, I will have to acknowledge I am," said the editor. "The good old American game of baseball pleases me very much."

"Well, I like it myself," the pilot stated. "I like the dog shows and the horse shows we are having now, too. There is nothing as entertaining as to see well-bred horses and dogs all as anxious as their owners to take blue ribbons and medals."

"We must not forget the apple blossom festival in Virginia," said the editor, so the pilot turned the airship over the Shenandoah Valley, where the apple blossoms ladened the trees.

"There she is," said the pilot, "Queen Shenandoah and her court." There she was, indeed—Miss Helen Ames Washington, a collateral descendant of George Washington and queen of the apple blossom festival at Winchester, Va., standing with her court of lovely young Virginia girls.

"That is the French Ambassador, M. Paul Claudel, placing the crown on Queen Shenandoah's head," the editor pointed out. "I guess he will write a poem about it. He is a famous poet, you know."

"I guess we had better check up on the Akron, buffeting those head winds on her way to California," said the pilot. "It was a great sight when the newest, largest airship in the world, the naval airship Akron, left Lakehurst for her trip to the airship base at Rosedale, Calif. Of course she expected to encounter some gales and storms, but it seems that the elements had a special reception for the queen of the air about Texas."

Then they flew over Chicago to see the committees of arrangements of the National Republican party and the National Democratic party getting ready for the great conventions of each party to be held there in June.

"They will nominate Hoover again, of course, when the Republicans meet in conclave," offered the editor, "but we will have some exciting times until we hear the final reports from the Democratic party as to who will be the Democratic nominee."

"Well," said the pilot, with a laugh, "may the best man win."

Then they saw the preparations for the Chicago world's fair going on apace.

Over the ocean they flew to Scotland, where they saw the King and Queen of England enjoying a vacation. They swooped down to look into the playhouse of Princess Elizabeth, daughter of the Duke and Duchess of York, playing with her little sister, Princess Margaret Rose, in the playhouse given to her by the people of Wales, who, of course, belong to the United Kingdom of Great Britain.

Over in Paris they dipped their airship in salute as the funeral of the late M. Paul Doumer, President of France, went by.

"It is dreadful to think that this fine and just man was killed by an assassin's bullet," exclaimed the pilot. "It seems such a cowardly thing to do, to go up and shoot a man without giving him a chance just because he does not think the way of the assassin."

"Indeed it does," agreed the editor. "But, of course, one of the ways to wipe out such things is to educate the people to the thought that every one has a right to his opinions, and that the people in high places usually try to direct the destiny of nations for the good of all the people of the nations."

"I feel that way, too," said the pilot. "I really hate to see attacks on men in high places. I think, of course, that many of us disagree with certain things our leaders may do, and that we all have a right to our opinions. But there is a great difference between an honest expression of opinion and an attack."

They dipped the airship once more in salute as they passed over the imposing monument erected by the French at Thieval, near Arras, in memory of the British who fought and died under the French flag in the World War.

"I hear the Prince of Wales will attend the dedication in June," said the pilot.

"I know he will," spoke up the editor. "He is the good-will agent of the British people."

Chivalry Feature Of Every Knight's Word and Thought

Be a knight all the time. Don't just be a knight when you are on parade. A real member of the Knighthood of Youth obeys the knightly rules when he is by himself or at home as well as when he is out at school or his parents have company.

To be a really knightly person in actions and thoughts it is necessary to form the knightly habit. A boy or girl who is polite to the little girl or boy next door and is rude to their own brothers and sisters are not true knights.

Be as careful to be obedient to your parents as you are to your teachers. Be polite when you feel badly as well as when you are well.

It is hard to still be polite when other people are rude to you, but a true knight does this. A true knight meets the world with chin up and eyes gazing fearlessly forward.

Be sure that you apply the rule of knighthood to everything about your daily life. Do not think that you can be careful in one direction and careless in another and maintain the knightly high standard you are striving for if you are a member of the Knighthood of Youth. The boys and girls of today will be the men and women of tomorrow who will be expected to carry on the work and service of this country and the world in a truly knightly fashion.

Since you have raised the banner of knighthood over your daily life by becoming a member of the Knighthood of Youth remember you are expected to be an example to the boys and girls with whom you associate every day. Do not let them think that members of the Knighthood of Youth do unknightly things.

THE STORY BOOK LADY

"We are going for a week-end camping trip, and I am going to take some books to read," said Martha. "Mother says books always add to the enjoyment of any week-end outing. Father has a set of the smallest books with the clearest print which he always takes, all his favorites, and he reads to us out of them."

"I always take my favorite books, two or three of them, at least," declared Maud, as she waited with the rest for the Story Book Lady and the members of the Junior Post Writers' Club and the Knighthood of Youth to join to start on the weekly pilgrimage to Story Book Land.

"We take a vote on which book to take," said William, "and then father reads it to us."

"That is a good idea," said the Story Book Lady, as she hurried up with a long list of sights to see in Story Book Land in her hand.

"I agree with you," said Mr. Gnome, who keeps the gate of the Fairy Tale Bridge that leads to Story Book Land, as he pushed open wide the gate with the help of his three grandsons, Blick and Flick and Little Mick, and then stood with them with his green hat in his hand as the Story Book Lady and her companions hurried through the gate. "We always take a vote on which book to read on our picnics."

"Well," said the Story Book Fairy gayly, as she arrived in her apple blossom airplane, followed by Merry and Jolly, the Story Book fairy children, in their apple blossom planes, "we always take a fairy vote on the book the queen is to read at her Fairy Story Court."

"Bow, wow, wow, wow," said a dog at the end of a book street. "I hope some of you will vote to take me on a picnic. I love picnics, and just see what a nice book I am in."

"Well, we will," said the Story Book Lady laughingly as she put on her magic glasses. "This is, indeed, a very nice dog, and I am sure he is in a very nice book. Let me see. 'Jerry, the Adventures of an Army Dog,' by Capt. S. P. Meek (the Century Co., New York). Of course, everybody in the Army post loved Jerry. Who would not? And what a good time he did have."

"Oh, and this book is all about a girl," said Alice, "a school girl just like we are, or perhaps a little older than most of us. She looks so nice."

"She does look nice," said the Story Book Lady, putting on her magic glasses, as they all hurried to the book street. "It is 'Ingrid's Holidays,' by Signe Lindegren (the MacMillan Co., New York), and it is all about a Swedish school girl. It has been written in Swedish and translated into English by Caroline Schleef. And just see what lovely pictures Vera Nevelle has made for the book.

"This is, of course, a nice story for the older girls," continued the Story Book Lady.

"This book seems to be for older girls, too," said Maude. "It is about a young girl, and it looks so interesting."

"So it does," said the Story Book Lady, putting on her magic glasses. "It is called 'Debby Barnes Trader,' by Constance Lindsay Skinner (the MacMillan Co., New York). The interesting drawings have been made by John Rae.

"Debby certainly had an interesting time," continued the Story Book Lady, putting her glasses more firmly on her nose, "She lived in Pennsylvania in the days when Indian tribes drifted about. She is made homeless by an Indian raid and goes into the business of hunting, trapping and trading. And what a time she does have and how many adventures shared by Sarah Boone and her 14-year-old son, Daniel.

"Oh, and there is the real Daniel Boone and young George Washington! This will be a nice book to take to camp this summer," said Anne.

"Well," said Thomas, as he hurried on to another book street, "I like travel tales, and here is one that looks good to me."

"Well," said the Story Book Lady, putting on her magic glasses, "it is tales of far-off Alaska, tales about Alaska, so I guess it could be classed as a travel book. Let me see—'Ah-Re-Gay, King of the Northland,' by Edward E. Knapp, with illustrations by John D. Whiting (the Milton Bradley Co., Springfield). This is full of all the things we like to read about—red fox and dog teams and little boys and girls who live in the frozen north."

Using Best Ability In Everyday Tasks Urged on Knights

Conscientiousness is a great virtue. "Anything worth doing at all is worth doing well" is an old adage which particularly applies to the Knighthood of Youth.

"Good enough" is a black knight whom the white knights must lead to better ways unless they let him spoil all the knightly ideals of the boys and girls around him.

Of course, everyone can not be perfect all the time. They can not always do perfect work no matter how much they try. But they must try and try again and put their best thought and effort into everything they do if they want to be real knights and leaders and give service to their city, their Nation and the world when they grow up.

A hastily scribbled lesson, or a bed carelessly made, an errand neglected, or any task unfinished means a great black mark on the record of the member of the Knighthood of Youth who fails to meet the rules in this way.

The member of the Knighthood of Youth who neglects his or her reminder card can never be led up the path of conscientiousness to the great castle of heart's desire.

Men and women respect the boy or girl, man or woman, who do their work the best they know how and who see that they have room for improvement and are not afraid to try and try and do a task over if necessary.

The most impossible task becomes easy if you keep on trying and trying, and doing it over and over again until you succeed. Great scientists who have given wonderful discoveries to the world to relieve human suffering and lead to human happiness have often kept at their task many years, trying and trying over and over again until at last they reached the goal for which they had been striving.

May Day.

May Day is a happy day,
Children laughing, always gay,
Happy at both work and play,
Through the joyous month of May.

Birds sing, while sunshine showers
Its beams upon the blooming flowers;
Nature sings and laughs all day,
Through the joyous month of May.

STRANGE AS IT SEEMS — By JOHN HIX

Perhaps you are wondering why you have never heard of R P Williams, the greatest all-round athlete the world has ever known The reasons are many he established records at a time when athletic accomplishments received much less notice than now, the all-round athlete is often overshadowed by the specialty athlete, and Williams turned professional early in his career, and as a result his records have received little recognition

An examination of the records of all the great athletes, men like Malone, Berry, Knox, Thompson, Williams and Jim Thorpe, clearly shows that Williams was the greatest of them all.

Most of Williams' records were made between the years of 1896 and 1910. The super-athlete was a star in more than a dozen forms of athletic endeavor. Some of his records are 20 yd. dash—2-1/5 seconds; 40 yds.—4-2/5 seconds, 60 yds.—6 seconds; 440 yds., (around four turns), 47-2/5 seconds; 100 meters—10-1/5 seconds; standing jump with weights—15 ft., 4 in., standing back jump with weights, 13 ft., 3 in.; running broad jump, 24 ft., 6 in. and many weight-lifting records

In the last 27 years, Williams has played over 8,600 games of hand ball. Meeting nearly 900 expert opponents, he defeated each man at least once by the score of 21 to 0

Still active in athletics, he is coach and trainer of football, basketball and track at Wittenberg College, Springfield, Ohio

Williams still holds many world's records, and his greatest feat has never been equalled. At Winthrop, Mass., on June 2, 1906, timed by five absolutely perfect watches, and on an accurately measured track, he ran the 100 yard dash in the almost unbelievable time of NINE SECONDS. For this feat he stands alone as the "World's Fastest Human"
